DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Nathan Boone House is a one and one-half story "Classic" saddle-bag pioneer log house, built in 1837. This house is of the type constructed on the east coast from Virginia and North Carolina, west through Kentucky and Tennessee to the Ozark area of Missouri and Arkansas. (Buford L. Pickens in a letter to Dr. Richard S. Brownlee, Director of the State Historical Society of Missouri, December 16, 1963.)

The facade (west wall) is approximately 55 feet in length. It is symmetrical with two windows on either side of the central doorway.

The hand-hewn oak log walls rest on a stone foundation. Portions of the foundation visible on the north, east and south sides have been faced with cement. The logs have been sheathed in two layers of weatherboarding. The log structure is visible, however, on the rear porch where the wall is exposed above the eave line of the lean-to roof.

All of the structural timbers appear to be original with the exception of a 10 to 13 foot section of replaced roof rafters on the west slope of the roof. (Buford L. Pickens in a letter to Dr. Richard S. Brownlee, December 16, 1963.)

Current roofing is wood shingle exposed on the west (front) slope, and covered with sheet metal on the east. The deteriorated condition of the underlying structure of the roof is evidenced by its sagging between the rafters.

Two large chimneys of rough-cut, locally quarried stone are centered on the exterior of the north and south gable end walls. Of these, the north chimney appears to be in good condition with base, stepped shoulders and stack intact. The south chimney has lost its stack; the opening has been capped with concrete. Mortar used in the chimney construction is sandy-colored and fine-grained with pebble inclusions 1/16th of an inch or less in diameter.

A porch on the rear (east) side of the house, originally open, has been partitioned. The southern 2/3 of the length of the porch has been screened in; the northern 1/3 of the porch is enclosed by wood frame walls to accommodate a kitchen and half-bathroom.

The window and door openings on the exterior are all simply framed in wood. The four windows symmetrically placed on the facade contain double-hung four over four light sash. Two windows on the east wall of the kitchen addition are also double-hung with six over six light sash. Attic windows appear only on the gable end walls and are of the casement type, with six lights in each frame and one frame to each window. Both pairs of attic windows have recently been covered with sheet metal.

Although the exterior house is devoid of ornamentation, a noteworthy feature appears on the facade. The four major, plate support beams (butts visible) orienting east and west project in a line just below the eaves forming a slight overhang. Each of these beam butts is cased for weather protection.

The interior plan of the house is reflected in the symmetry of the facade. Inside, two generous size rooms, each 21 feet square, flank a central hallway.

In the north room the original, wood-pegged, wide-plank flooring has been covered with narrow width flooring. The floor level is raised about 3" above original. Flooring in the south room is original.

Fireplaces in both rooms are stone, and neither is functional. The firebox of the north room fireplace has been reinforced on each side with brick and mortar which extends the length of one brick into the fireplace. The mantles do not date from the construction of the house, and are ante-bellum with mouldings similar to the door trim. (Buford L. Pickens in a letter to Dr. Richard S. Brownlee, December 16, 1963.) The hearth and firebox of the south room fireplace are in deteriorated condition. This fireplace is presently concealed from view by the addition of a drywall partition extending the width of the room immediately in front of the fireplace from the east to the west wall. Shallow closets have been added to either side of the fireplace.

The north room fireplace wall has been paneled with knotty-pine of recent date. A stove pipe hole has been cut above the fireplace. The remaining walls in the north and south rooms are plastered and wallpapered.

Each interior door is made of six upright planks secured by a bevel-edged batten at top and bottom. (See photograph.)

An enclosed corner stairway at the rear (east end) of the central hallway gives access to the second floor loft or attic. The attic is partitioned into two rooms, separated by a narrow hallway, the east end of which has been partitioned. The structural members and partition log walls are exposed in the attic. Interstices are filled with wooden wedges and a coarse-grained mortar which includes pebbles and chopped straw.

Although a high proportion of the original form and material survive in fair condition, the house is deteriorating.

This former homestead is pleasingly situated in a shallow valley between two low, prairie hills, one to the east and one to the west. Ash trees abound on the property. The Nathan Boone family graveyard is approximately 500 yards to the north of the house. Inscriptions on the gravestones are still legible. A slave cemetery is located north of the family plot. Also included on the grounds are a threshing floor and several springs. (Dr. B.B. Lightfoot in a letter to Dr. Richard S. Brownlee, December, 1963.) There are no visible remains of the original outbuildings.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

The Nathan Boone House is primarily significant as one of the first structures built in southwest Missouri. Nathan Boone, the youngest of Daniel Boone's ten children, constructed the house in 1837 with the assistance of his sons. This building is architecturally significant as a rare surviving example in Missouri of the "classic" saddle-bag type of pioneer log house built prior to the advent of saw mills. (Buford L. Pickens in a letter to Dr. Richard S. Brownlee, December 16, 1968.)

Born on March 2, 1781 in Boone's Station, Fayette County, Kentucky, Nathan Boone came to Missouri in 1799 settling in the Femme Osage River Valley District in St. Charles County. Nathan and his wife, Olive Van Bibber, received Spanish Land Grant No. 1794 (680 acres) near the Femme Osage Creek where he constructed a two-story rock house.

While living in the St. Charles area (1799-1837), Nathan Boone manufactured salt at Boonslick in Howard County with his brother Daniel Morgan Boone from 1807-1815; served as a captain of a company of rangers during the War of 1812; and traveled with William Clark in 1808 to the point above the Missouri River at which Fort Osage was constructed for the protection and trading rights of the Osage Indian tribes. Boone acted as messenger to summon the Big and Little Osage tribes to the newly constructed fort which served as the westernmost outpost of the United States Government until 1819.

In May of 1820, Nathan was chosen as one of three delegates to represent the St. Charles District at the Missouri Constitution Convention in St. Louis. (Louis Houck, A History of Missouri, Vol. III, p. 249.)

Nathan also served as a surveyor for the Federal government in Missouri, Kansas and the Indian Territory. While engaged in this work, Boone was attracted to his future homesite, located in a grove of ash trees in southwestern Missouri. In 1835, Nathan sent his son to this location to file preemption rights. (History of Greene County, Missouri, 1833, p. 149.) The exact amount of land preempted by Nathan's son is not known. However, Nathan Boone is said to have owned at one time 1,200 acres at this site. ("Graves of Nathan Boone's Family," Missouri Historical Review, Vol. 23, July 1929, pp. 660-661.)

In 1837, Nathan Boone was forced to sell his home and 700½ acres in the Femme Osage Valley to pay a debt which he had contracted while serving as a bondsman for a county official who had absconded with the county funds. Some time during 1837, Nathan Boone and his family moved to the newly acquired land located north of the present town of Ash Grove. The log house was built that same year.

Nathan Boone is noted for his distinguished service with the United States Army. He entered the army as a Captain during the Black Hawk War of 1832, and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel in 1853. (Louis Houck, A History of Missouri, Vol. III, pp. 264-265.)

Nathan Boone died at his home in 1856; his wife died two years later. Boone and other members of the family are buried in a graveyard north of the house.
