The first resident was William L. Campbell "commercial editor" at the Kansas City Journal. Although Campbell appears on an 1886 water permit and is listed as early as 1887 in the City Directory, a home at this address does not appear on the 1891 City Atlas. An additional water permit dating 1892 reveals that the home was more than likely constructed in 1892.

This 2½ story home features a partial-width porch with wooden piers and wooden spindlework rail. Centered double-door entry with arched transom, east elevation. Projecting bays, turrets and varied roof line combine to give a complex silhouette. Fenestration, often paired and featuring fixed stained glass transoms, is double-hung, sash with stone sills. Remaining fenestration is fixed with transom, and arched. Other features include a prominent front-facing gable, denticulated and decorative brickwork, a secondary shed porch at the south elevation, and multiple brick chimneys. Projecting gabled bay, north elevation, features prominent triangular knee-bracing. Three-story brick unit to rear or west is non-original.

The original home, shown on an 1891 atlas is Queen Anne in profile, constructed of brick. Over the years this home has been drastically altered. Presently, this home features a full-width, full-height, non-original porch supported by classically-inspired piers. Off-centered entrance with segmental arched stained-glass transom below prominent stone header, west elevation. Fenestration is double-hung, sash-type segmental arched with stone sills and prominent stone headers with keystones. Multiple gabled dormers. Plaster covered chimney, north elevation. Projecting bay, south elevation. Original profile and massing has been obscured by remodeling.

This unusual home features a full-width two-tier porch with rusticated stone piers (3/4 height), stone railing at the first-story, and a non-original wooden railing at the second-story. Second-story porch height may have been altered from original. Off-centered entry with transom and wide stone lintel, east elevation. Fenestration is double-hung, sash-type with wide stone lintels and sills; second-story fenestration, east elevation has been altered significantly, while the stone voussiors at the north bay are original. Hipped dormers, east elevation. Portions of facade brick have been replaced. Other features include tile coping, terra-cotta decoration, brick corbeling and an exterior brick chimney cut-off at the roof line. Three-tier porch to rear is non-original, as are the third-story windows, south elevation. North facade has been plastered.
