DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The James Brothers' House near Kearney, Missouri, is a one-story two room log cabin built in 1822, and facing south. A later, wood frame addition with one story plus attic, is attached to the east wall and at a right angle to the cabin forming a "T" plan structure. The frame addition faces east.

EXTERIOR

Log Cabin

The log cabin is constructed of horizontal squared logs, 7 1/2" in diameter and is clapboarded on the exterior. The logs are flush and crudely dovetailed at the corners; interfill is of limestone rock and sand plaster. The 1 foot wide clapboards are unfinished.

An entrance porch spanning the eastern two thirds of the cabin's south wall is floored with wooden planks 3 1/2" in width and 7'9" in length. The bottoms of the three posts supporting the open south porch have rotted and are resting on limestone. The floor planks on the porch of the log cabin are also rotting. The west end of the south porch has been enclosed to form a small storage room. A tree has grown in the southwest corner of this room, separating the joining in this corner. Clapboards have been nailed directly to this tree. Rotted portions of the clapboarding on the west wall have been replaced with random boarding reinforced with sheet metal.

The openings in the log cabin include two windows and a door (which has been boarded shut) on the north facade; two doors on either side of a window on the south facade; and one entrance door on the east wall of the small storage room. The west door on the south wall and the entrance to the storage room are boarded. The windows are all double hung 6 over 6 light sash with board framing. The glass which is putty glazed from the exterior is imperfect and may be original. The lower half of the west window on the east wall has been boarded. The wooden plank doors are braced by two horizontal boards on the interior. The log cabin has settled three feet or more since its construction. Therefore, the former 5'11" high door on the north wall is now 3'10" high.

The log cabin has a simple ridge roof which is wood shingled. The southern slope of the roof continues over the south porch and is supported by three squared wooden posts. There is a large, centrally-located chimney made of roughly shaped limestone blocks set in lime mortar; it has a stone drip course and wooden cap with metal flashing. Two lightning rods are located on either side of the chimney stack.

JAMES BROTHERS' HOUSE

The Frame Addition

The southern two-thirds of the wood frame addition rests on a rubble coursed, limestone foundation. The northern third, constructed later, rests on a foundation wall of reinforced concrete. The entire addition has been clapboarded and painted white.

The openings in the addition consist of one window on the south facade, two doors flanked by two windows on the older section of the east facade, a double window on the newer section of the east wall, an entrance door on the northwest porch, and one on the southwest leading to the porch of the log cabin. (see sketch plan). The older windows are large double-hung 2 over 2 light sash. The two front doors are paneled, while the doors and windows all have a simple wooden sill and a decoratively molded wood lintel. Each corner of the frame addition has an applied pilaster and cap.

A porch, centered on the older section of the east facade, is approached by two wooden steps. Its sloping roof is supported by three round wooden posts across the front (east) and two identical half posts against the facade. Each of the posts has scroll brackets.

The simple ridge roof is covered with asphalt shingles. The frame addition has two brick chimneys on the roof ridge, one near the center of the ridge and one near the north gable end. The main bodies of the flues are enclosed within the frame walls. Two lightning rods flank the central chimney.

INTERIOR

Log Cabin

The interior of the log cabin is divided into two rooms by a large, central chimney with double back to back fireboxes. The west room is 17' by 16'4"; the east room is 17' by 13'3". The limestone blocks of the fireplaces and hearths are set in lime mortar. Both fireplaces have wooden mantels. A coal stove has been added in the west room and stands in front of the fireplace.

JAMES BROTHERS' HOUSE

Floors and ceilings in both rooms are of random width planks. The floor of the west room is about 2' above the level of the east room and is approached on the south by two wooden steps. The original ceiling height was about 6'4". The log walls are covered with wallpaper, backed by a canvas-like material. The dividing walls between the east, west and southwest rooms are all of squared logs covered with paper.

Ceiling, floors and walls of the log cabin are buckling as a result of the settling. The interior flooring is uneven and the ceiling exhibits a noticeable sag. This portion of the structure is presently in deteriorated condition.

The interior of the wood frame addition is divided into three rooms: the south room is 15'3" by 15'6", the middle room is 15'3" by 15'9", and the room on the north is 15'3" by 13'8". A 4'7" by 10' porch spans most of the western wall of the north room. The wooden plank flooring is covered with linoleum. The walls and ceilings are wallpapered. Two chimney closets protrude from the interior walls, one on the north wall of the north room and one on the south wall of the middle room. A modern heating stove is located on the south wall of the middle room. All of the interior doors in the southern two rooms are paneled and have the square and rosette framing molding at the corners. The door on the west wall of the middle room that connects with the log cabin has been made into a dutch door. The ceilings are approximately 10' high.

The frame addition is in good structural condition, although the interior wallpaper is peeling and there are several cracks in the plaster in the south room.

CHRONOLOGY AND CONDITION

Jacob Gromer built a two-room log cabin with a log tack room and porch on the property in 1822. Only this portion of the presently existing house has historic associations with both of the James Brothers. The James family acquired the farm in 1845 and added a one and one-half story white frame addition to the cabin and covered the logs with siding. In 1893, after Jesse James' death, his mother sold the frame addition to the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. This same year she added the southern two rooms and east porch of the frame addition. In 1935, the log section of the house proved unlivable, and the remaining James family built a frame kitchen (north room) and screen enclosed porch. The log cabin was clapboarded for the first time in 1845 and resingled in 1935. (Mrs. Margaret Bade, administratrix of the property, interviewed by Charla A. Piggot on August 19, 1969.)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The James Brothers' House is significant as the birthplace of Jesse and Frank James and has been selected as the most important site related to the James Brothers in Missouri. Within the scope of Missouri history, the brothers are stereotypes of guerilla bands emanating from the turmoil and violence of the Reconstruction period. The impact of their outlawry on the gubernatorial election of 1882 and on the legends evolving in the dime-novels on the "Wild West" reflect the significance of the James legend to American political and social history.

Frank James, born on January 10, 1843 and Jesse James, born on September 5, 1847 were the sons of Robert and Zerelda Scott James. Robert James was a respected citizen, serving as pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church for seven years and also as a member of the board of trustees of William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri. He died on the Pacific Coast while following the "gold rush" of 1849. His wife twice remarried: first to her neighbor Benjamin Simms, and upon his death to Dr. Reuben Samuel in 1855.¹

"...the James band's career of lawlessness and the growth of the legends around it are deeply rooted in and inextricably bound to the events of the Civil War and its aftermath. The nature of the war in Missouri, a border state, produced bands of guerillas from which many postwar outlaws came." The family became involved in the intense Missouri and Kansas border warfare over the extension of slavery. During the Civil War, Frank James joined William Clark Quantrill's band of guerillas fighting for the Southern cause in Missouri. During the war, Mrs. Samuel and Jesse carried messages and served as lookouts. Suspected by the local militia for their rebel activities, the militia visited the house and abused the family. After this episode, Jesse, at the age of 17, joined Quantrill.

After the war, the brothers returned to the farm and lived there for the next four years. However, they continued a lawless way of life and became notorious outlaws. Their first robbery took place in 1866 at the Commercial Bank of Liberty, Missouri where they stole $58,000.00 and murdered a young boy. Their last robbery took place in 1881 when the gang robbed the Chicago and Alton Railroad near Blue Cut, Missouri.²

On January 26, 1875 a raid occurred on the James Farm which caused broad repercussions throughout the State of Missouri. A flaming ball was thrown into the window. The ball exploded, killing Mrs. Samuel's youngest son, Archie Peyton Samuel, and maiming her right hand so that amputation was necessary. Evidence pointed to the Pinkerton Detective Agency as the responsible party; the James brothers had previously murdered three Pinkerton men.³

The raid generated sympathy among the people of Missouri for the James family, and consequently, a resolution was passed in the General Assembly calling for an investigation. But this was not enough, the public soon agitated for the passage of an amnesty bill which would cover the acts committed by the James brothers during the Civil War. The Missouri Constitution of 1865 failed to provide means of granting amnesty to ex-confederates, and legislators heatedly debated the issue. Although a majority of the General Assembly voted for the bill (58 for and 39 against), it lacked the necessary two-thirds majority. The fact that it did almost pass illustrates the importance of the James brothers in Missouri history. Following are some excerpts from the bill:

Whereas, Under the outlawry pronounced against Jesse W. James, Coleman Younger, Robert Younger, James Younger, and others, who gallantly periled their lives and their all in defense of their principles, they are of necessity made desperate, driven as they are from the fields of honest industry, from their friends, their families, their homes and their country, they can know no law but the law of self-preservation; can have no respect of and feel no allegiance to a government which forces them to the very acts it professes to deprecate and then offer a bounty for their apprehension, and arms foreign mercenaries with power to capture and kill;

Whereas, Believing these men too brave to be mean, too generous to be revengeful, and too gallant and honorable to betray a friend or break a promise, and believing further, that most, if not all, the offences with which they are charged have been committed by others, and perhaps by those pretending to hunt them, or their confederates, that their names are and have been used to divert suspicion from, and thereby relieve the actual attention to the real criminals, and that common justice, sound policy and true statesmanship alike demand that general amnesty should be extended to all alike, of both parties, for attacks done or charged to have been done during the war; there be it resolved,...⁴

By the gubernatorial election of 1882, the Republican Party had maneuvered, by exploiting the lawlessness, to pitch the Confederate and ex-Union groups against each other. They charged the Democratic administration of Governor Thomas Crittenden as being responsible for the robberies and murders of the James Gang and exclaimed that the ruffians would remain free because of their Confederate background. The Republican Party lost this campaign issue when on April 3, 1882, Jesse James was killed by Bob Ford, a member of his own gang. Ford was bribed by Governor Crittenden of Missouri to kill James in return for full pardon for his crimes and a share of the reward money. After Jesse's death, Frank surrendered and was tried and acquitted three times for murder.⁵ Frank James retired to the family home after the trials and lived there until his death in 1915.⁶

The people of Missouri were sympathetic to the Frank James case and condemned Ford and Crittenden for the premeditated murder of Jesse. At this time the Republicans attempted to capitalize on this turn of events by adopting a resolution congratulating Governor Crittenden for his actions. The Democrats realizing the political suicide involved quickly squelched the resolution.

JAMES BROTHERS' HOUSE

In newspaper accounts, dime-novels, and ballads, the brothers were celebrated and became folk heroes as "Robin Hood" characters who robbed the rich Northerners and arrogant railroad capitalists to give to the poor. Many people pardoned their murders by rationalizing that the brothers were a product of their environment and their violent upbringing. The Southerners in Missouri felt that Frank and Jesse were simply carrying on the war against the powerful northern railroad and banks.⁷ Carl Sandburg has stated that: "Jesse James is the only American bandit who is classical, who is to this country what Robin Hood or Dick Turpin is to England, whose exploits are so close to the mythical and apocryphal."⁸

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The James Brothers' House near Kearney, Missouri, is a one-story two room log cabin built in 1822, and facing south. A later, wood frame addition with one story plus attic, is attached to the east wall and at a right angle to the cabin forming a "T" plan structure. The frame addition faces east.

Exterior

Log Cabin

The log cabin is constructed of horizontal squared logs, 7 1/2" in diameter and is clapboarded on the exterior. The logs are flush and crudely dovetailed at the corners; interfill is of limestone rock and sand plaster. The 1 foot wide clapboards are unfinished.

An entrance porch spanning the eastern two-thirds of the cabin's south wall is floored with wooden planks 3 1/2" in width and 7'9" in length. The bottoms of the three posts supporting the open south porch have rotted and are resting on limestone. The floor planks on the porch of the log cabin are also rotting. The west end of the south porch has been enclosed to form a small storage room. A tree has grown in the southwest corner of this room, separating the joining in this corner. Clapboards have been nailed directly to this tree. Rotted portions of the clapboarding on the west wall have been replaced with random boarding reinforced with sheet metal.

The openings in the log cabin include two windows and a door (which has been boarded shut) on the north facade; two doors on either side of a window on the south facade; and one entrance door on the east wall of the small storage room. The west door on the south wall and the entrance to the storage room are boarded. The windows are all double hung six-over-six light sash with board framing. The glass which is putty glazed from the exterior is imperfect and may be original. The lower half of the west window on the east wall has been boarded. The wooden plank doors are braced by two horizontal boards on the interior. The log cabin has settled three feet or more since its construction. Therefore, the former 5'11" high door on the north wall is now 3'10" high.

The log cabin has a simple ridge roof which is wood shingled. The southern slope of the roof continues over the south porch and is supported by three squared wooden posts. There is a large, centrally-located chimney made of roughly shaped limestone blocks set in lime mortar; it has a stone drip course and wooden cap with metal flashing. Two lightning rods are located on either side of the chimney stack.

INTERIOR

Log Cabin

The interior of the log cabin is divided into two rooms by a large, central chimney with double back to back fireboxes. The west room is 17' by 16'4"; the east room is 17' by 13'3". The limestone blocks of the fireplaces and hearths are set in lime mortar. Both fireplaces have wooden mantels. A coal stove has been added in the west room and stands in front of the fireplace.

Floors and ceilings in both rooms are of random width planks. The floor of the west room is about 2' above the level of the east room and is approached on the south by two wooden steps. The original ceiling height was about 6'4". The log walls are covered with wallpaper, backed by a canvas-like material. The dividing walls between the east, west and southwest rooms are all of squared logs covered with paper.

Ceiling, floors and walls of the log cabin are buckling as a result of the settling. The interior flooring is uneven and the ceiling exhibits a noticeable sag. This portion of the structure is presently in deteriorated condition.

The interior of the wood frame addition is divided into three rooms: the south room is 15'3" by 15'6", the middle room is 15'3" by 15'9", and the room on the north is 15'3" by 13'8". A 4'7" by 10' porch spans most of the western wall of the north room. The wooden plank flooring is covered with linoleum. The walls and ceilings are wallpapered. Two chimney closets protrude from the interior walls, one on the north wall of the north room and one on the south wall of the middle room. A modern heating stove is located on the south wall of the middle room. All of the interior doors in the southern two rooms are paneled and have the square and rosette framing molding at the corners. The door on the west wall of the middle room that connects with the log cabin has been made into a dutch door. The ceilings are approximately 10' high.

The frame addition is in good structural condition, although the interior wallpaper is peeling and there are several cracks in the plaster in the south room.

Jacob Gromer built a two-room log cabin with a log tack room and porch on the property in 1822. Only this portion of the presently existing house has historic associations with both of the James Brothers. The James family acquired the farm in 1845 and added a one and one-half story white frame addition to the cabin and covered the logs with siding. In 1893 after Jesse James' death, his mother sold the frame addition to the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. This same year she added the southern two rooms and east porch of the frame addition. In 1935, the log section of the house proved unlivable, and the remaining James family built a frame kitchen (north room) and screen enclosed porch. The log cabin was clapboarded for the first time in 1845 and reshingled in 1935. (Mrs. Margaret Bade, administratrix of the property, interviewed by Charla A. Piggot on August 19, 1969.)

SITE

The James Brothers' House occupies the approximate center of a 40 acre tract of land. This property has been in the James family continuously from October 13, 1845 (Clay County Deed Record Book M, page 255) until July 7, 1978 on which date the property passed from the last James descendants, Chester and Gertie Barr to the County of Clay. The county proposes to use the farm as a historical site. Plans include restoration of the James Home (presently deteriorated) construction of a museum and gift shop, establishment of a "living farm" and possible creation of an outdoor theater to present the life of the James Brothers. These facilities will be properly screened from the actual home and outbuildings (David Frye, Administrative Assistant, County Court of Clay County, Missouri, correspondence with James M. Denny, Section Chief, Nominations-Survey, Office of Historic Preservation, May 25, 1978.)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The James Brothers' House is significant as the birthplace of Jesse and Frank James and has been selected as the most important site related to the James Brothers in Missouri. Within the scope of Missouri history, the brothers are stereotypes of guerilla bands emanating from the turmoil and violence of the Reconstruction period. The impact of their outlawry on the gubernatorial election of 1882 and on the legends evolving in the dime-novels on the "Wild West" reflect the significance of the James legend to American political and social history.

Frank James, born on January 10, 1843 and Jesse James, born on September 5, 1847 were the sons of Robert and Zerelda Scott James. Robert James was a respected citizen, serving as pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church for seven years and also as a member of the board of trustees of William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri. He died on the Pacific Coast while following the "gold rush" of 1849. His wife twice remarried: first to her neighbor Benjamin Simms, and upon his death to Dr. Reuben Samuel in 1855.

"...the James band's career of lawlessness and the growth of the legends around it are deeply rooted in and inextricably bound to the events of the Civil War and its aftermath. The nature of the war in Missouri, a border state, produced bands of guerillas from which many postwar outlaws came." The family became involved in the intense Missouri and Kansas border warfare over the extension of slavery. During the Civil War, Frank James joined William Clark Quantrill's band of guerillas fighting for the Southern cause in Missouri. During the war, Mrs. Samuel and Jesse carried messages and served as lookouts. Suspected by the local militia for their rebel activities, the militia visited the house and abused the family. After this episode, Jesse, at the age of 17, joined Quantrill.

After the war, the brothers returned to the farm and lived there for the next four years. However, they continued a lawless way of life and became notorious outlaws. Their first robbery took place in 1866 at the Commercial Bank of Liberty, Missouri where they stole $58,000.00 and murdered a young boy. Their last robbery took place in 1881 when the gang robbed the Chicago and Alton Railroad near Blue Cut, Missouri.²

On January 26, 1875 a raid occurred on the James Farm which caused broad repercussions throughout the State of Missouri. A flaming ball was thrown into the window. The ball exploded, killing Mrs. Samuel's youngest son, Archie Peyton Samuel, and maiming her right hand so that amputation was necessary. Evidence pointed to the Pinkerton Detective Agency as the responsible party; the James brothers had previously murdered three Pinkerton men.³

The raid generated sympathy among the people of Missouri for the James family, and consequently, a resolution was passed in the General Assembly calling for an investigation. But this was not enough, the public soon agitated for the passage of an amnesty bill which would cover the acts committed by the James brothers during the Civil War. The Missouri Constitution of 1865 failed to provide means of granting amnesty to ex-confederates, and legislators heatedly debated the issue. Although a majority of the General Assembly voted for the bill (58 for and 39 against), it lacked the necessary two-thirds majority. The fact that it did almost pass illustrates the importance of the James brothers in Missouri history. Following are some excerpts from the bill:

Whereas, Under the outlawry pronounced against Jesse W. James, Coleman Younger, Robert Younger, James Younger, and others, who gallantly periled their lives and their all in defense of their principles, they are of necessity made desperate, driven as they are from the fields of honest industry, from their friends, their families, their homes and their country, they can know no law but the law of self-preservation; can have no respect of and feel no allegiance to a government which forces them to the very acts it professes to deprecate and then offer a bounty for their apprehension, and arms foreign mercenaries with power to capture and kill;

Whereas, Believing these men too brave to be mean, too generous to be revengeful, and too gallant and honorable to betray a friend or break a promise, and believing further, that most, if not all, the offences with which they are charged have been committed by others, and perhaps by those pretending to hunt them, or their confederates, that their names are and have been used to divert suspicion from, and thereby relieve the actual attention to the real criminals, and that common justice, sound policy and true statesmanship alike demand that general amnesty should be extended to all alike, of both parties, for attacks done or charged to have been done during the war; there be it resolved,...

By the gubernatorial election of 1882, the Republican Party had maneuvered, by exploiting the lawlessness, to pitch the Confederate and ex-Union groups against each other. They charged the Democratic administration of Governor Thomas Crittenden as being responsible for the robberies and murders of the James Gang and exclaimed that the ruffians would remain free because of their Confederate background. The Republican Party lost this campaign issue when on April 3, 1882, Jesse James was killed by Bob Ford, a member of his own gang. Ford was bribed by Governor Crittenden of Missouri to kill James in return for full pardon for his crimes and a share of the reward money. After Jesse's death, Frank surrendered and was tried and acquitted three times for murder.⁵ Frank James retired to the family home after the trials and lived there until his death in 1915.⁶

The people of Missouri were sympathetic to the Frank James case and condemned Ford and Crittenden for the premeditated murder of Jesse. At this time the Republicans attempted to capitalize on this turn of events by adopting a resolution congratulating Governor Crittenden for his actions. The Democrats realizing the political suicide involved quickly squelched the resolution.

In newspaper accounts, dime-novels, and ballads, the brothers were celebrated and became folk heroes as "Robin Hood" characters who robbed the rich Northerners and arrogant railroad capitalists to give to the poor. Many people pardoned their murders by rationalizing that the brothers were a product of their environment and their violent upbringing. The Southerners in Missouri felt that Frank and Jesse were simply carrying on the war against the powerful northern railroad and banks.⁷ Carl Sandburg has stated that: "Jesse James is the only American bandit who is classical, who is to this country what Robin Hood or Dick Turpin is to England, whose exploits are so close to the mythical and apocryphal."⁸
