City directories indicate the utilization of property at this location as a site for worship by African-Americans dates from c. 1940 and continues today.

2X.

Building permits indicate this building originally had a flat roof which was replaced with a gable roof. Physical examination of the brick work which extends into the gable, doors and narrow single-pane windows suggests that these were elements added at the time of the change in the roof. Original components still extant are the ashlar foundation, and possibly the wooden belvedere- short steeple component. As a whole the building reflects a late 1950s appearance. Principle design features are the double doors centered in the front gable and a vertical bay above these created by the use of tile with a cross inset. Flanking the doors and entrance stoop are narrow single pane windows.

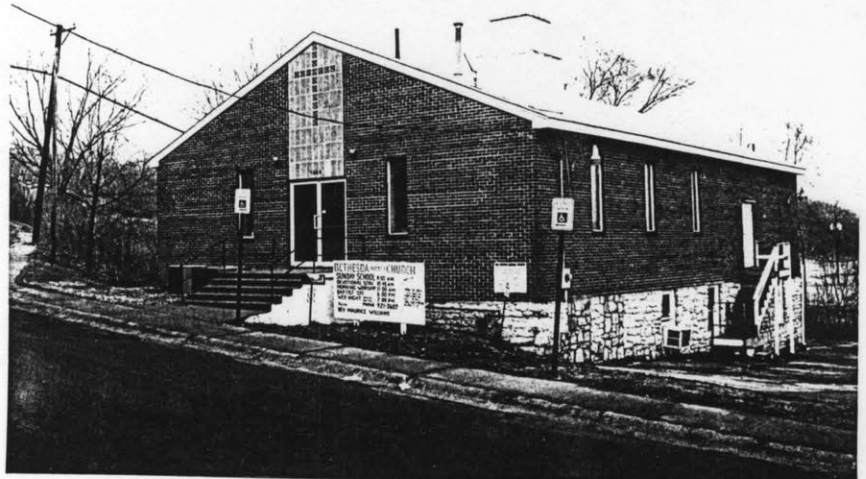

2Y.

Building is located on a gently sloping lot with a shallow set-back from street and sidewalk. A paved parking area is located to the side. The surrounding area is composed of gentle slopes with undeveloped property giving a slightly rural appearance in the immediate vicinity.

T. SIGNIFICANCE: This congregation was founded in 1924 in a meeting at the Winwood Dance Hall when a Sunday School group was organized. A basement structure, consecrated November 10, 1924, burned in 1933 at which time the congregation erected a temporary wooden structure with a stone basement. In 1936 work on permanent superstructure began and was completed within the next three years. The church was part of the development of the Winwood Community one of the early suburban areas in Kansas City's "Northland." The high level of integrity of this 1930s variation on the Tudor Revival style establishes the building as a distinctive property type and design of the era. Further research as to individual significance or as a contributing element in a potential district is warranted.

2X. FURTHER DESCRIPTION: This Tudor Revival church is distinguished by its form which utilizes a side-gabled roof, a primary facade dominated by a prominent, cross gable and massive tower, the dominant first story stone wall cladding combined with clapboards on the upper tower area and use of stucco and clapboard in the gable ends. The building footprint forms an L with the square tower set in the recess of the L. All but the upper areas of the gables and the upper story of the tower of the building are clad in random ashlar limestone. A cut-stone water table separates the above-ground-level basement from the first story of the building. The roof of the main portion of the building features a medium to high gable roof with a very shallow eave overhang. The tower roof is capped with a steeply pitched hipped (almost pyramidal) roof. Plain double entrance doors located in the side tower open directly onto ground level. Above the door is a semi-elliptical stonework arch. The doors are flanked by projecting stepback stone piers capped by domed cut stone. The pier treatment is also found on the back corner of the tower. The tower's ashlar wall rises from the ground to second story level and culminates in a pediment design capped in cut stone. Above this rises a square wood frame tower clad in horizontal weatherboard with end boards. On the second floor of the tower's entrance facade are two rectangular, double sash window openings fitted with wooden slats. All other windows in the building have stone sills. The rectangular single and paired windows on the main floor have shaped stone lintels and single panels of stained glass. The basement level windows which are placed just below the watertable are double hung sashes with four over four lights. On the side elevations these are placed directly under the first floor windows in a symmetrical arrangement. On the facade of the building they are placed in relation to the bays above. The gable front fenestration above the watertable is composed of rectangular triple windows set in a semi-circular arch of stone with a shaped keystone flanked by smaller rectangular windows.

Does not have sufficient significance in architecture for individual nomination but may be eligible as a contributing element of a historic district developed on the "Southside" of Kansas City in the period after World War I. This area was subject to suburban development during this period. There are several issues regarding integrity. The date of the large three-story addition is unknown but from its appearance dates sometime after the early 1950s. In addition the basement level entrance door on the east side of the original structure appears to be a significant alteration. A wheelchair ramp has been installed to the side of the entrance steps parallel to the walk leading to the entrance.

The Colonial Revival styling of this gable front design mimics Georgian and Adams prototypes. The use of the gable front is an uncommon sub-type of the style. A three-story side gable addition appears to be a later addition. The entrance facade is a symmetrical arrangement featuring a second story, central arched multi-pane stained glass window surrounded by an arched brick lintel with a cut stone keystone and simple stone lug sill.

2X. FURTHER DESCRIPTION: The Colonial Revival styling of this gable front design mimic's Georgian and Adams prototypes. The use of the gable front is an uncommon sub-type of the style. A three-story side gable addition which forms the T appears to be a later addition. The entrance facade is a symmetrical arrangement featuring a second story, central arched multi-pane stained glass window surrounded by an arched brick lintel with a cut stone keystone and simple stone lug sill. Below the window are paneled double doors surrounded by a wooden entablature supported by squared engaged wood columns. A multiple light flat transom is located above the doors. Flanking the entrance doors are rectangular windows with flat brick arches and stone keystone, simple lug stone sills, and double sashes with 6 over 9 lights. Centered above these windows on the second floor and flanking the large arched window are inset stone circular medallions. Flanking the window and door elements are piers composed of brickwork which mimics the brick quoins found on the corners of the building. The piers are capped by a simple wooden entablature. The west elevation incorporates a rectangular window situated between the brick quoining and which lights the entrance hall. Brick piers (evocative of buttresses) separate three arched, multi-paned windows with simple lug sills and brick arches with cut stone keystones. On the basement level, rectangular double-sash windows with eight over eight lights are situated directly below the windows on the first story. The east side replicates this arrangement with the exception of an entrance in the first bay which includes a single door, a small square fixed sash window with two over two lights and a bracketed shed roof. Above this is a small fixed-sash rectangular window with four over four lights, a simple stone lug sill and a brick flat arch with keystone. The large three-story addition replicates the brickwork of the earlier structure. The east entrance of the addition features a broken pediment door surround. Window sizes vary on each story but are all double-hung sashes with eight over eight lights and simple lug stone sills. While sensitive to the design of the earlier structure, the window and entrance configuration as well as scale and massing indicate a later addition. Both the earlier building and the addition feature use of the English bond variant with five stretcher rows per header row, brick quoins, and a cut stone water table. A cut-stone water table which delineates the partially above ground level basement from the first floor.

Embodies distinctive elements of the late Mission/Spanish Revival styling incorporated into a traditional Euro-American church plan.

Symmetrical arrangement incorporates a front gable with a square bell tower located midway on a secondary facade. Also typical of the style are the moderately pitched roofs with no overhang, red tile roof covering, paired doors and use of prominent arches above central doors and windows. An excellent example of mid-20th century variations in the absence or minimalization of decorative detail and ornamentation such as iron work, columns, cantilevered balconies, found in earlier versions of this eclectic period. Simple plan based on rectangle with apse and central nave and side entrance bell tower. Combination use of random ashlar stonework on first floor and brick on upper stories. The most distinguishing decorative motif on the primary facade is the use of cut stone 'Bargeboard' effect in the gable and eaves of the shed roofs.

T.

City Directories indicate that this property was utilized by African-Americans as a site for worship beginning c. 1940. The building was erected in 1912 by the caucasian congregation of the Agnes Methodist Episcopal Church at a cost of $3,000. In 1958 the building served the Christ Temple Pentecostal Church. As such it is indicative of the pattern of reuse by African American and immigrant congregations of houses of worship built and occupied previously by Caucasian American-born groups.

2X.

Original 1912 40x60 ft building features a two-story gable front entrance facade with an symmetrical arrangement of openings and partially exposed basement/ground level on the side and shallow brick parapets on the front and back gables. The most distinguishing features are the design in the entrance facade which incorporates raised brick work in the gable, shallow gable parapets, and large over-sized window openings on the second floor. There are several major issues of integrity. The original window openings have been filled in and, in several instances, now incorporate small, standard size windows with double-hung sashes (indicating that the original frames have been removed not boarded over; application of stucco to the ground floor level; and installation in 1958 of front stairs and a porch on the side to a new double door entrance.

2Y.

The building is located on the side of a large lot with a side parking area in a mixed-use neighborhood. The setback reflects commercial usage concerns rather than those traditionally found in residential neighborhoods.

Significant elements of the original structure are being retained (encapsulated) in the alterations, which include a brick veneer and window alterations. Established as part of the original town of Barry in Gallatin Township, Clay County, the congregation erected its first church a frame house of worship erected in 1840. Second frame church which is extant today was erected in 1859. Sabbath school established in 1885.

2X. FURTHER DESCRIPTION: Originally a wood frame structure clad in clapboard, which was distinguished by its front-gable design, the mid-nineteenth century church is currently being altered. Brick veneer has been added to the primary and secondary facades and modern windows which do not replicate the original fenestration have been added. Despite the alterations which significantly impact the historical integrity of the structure, it was at the beginning of the survey process intact and has been included in the survey as evidenced by the condition when photodocumented. Some of the original structural elements dating to the 1850s have been incorporated in the structure and it could still yield research evidence of building construction methods utilized at that time. The property does not qualify for eligibility for National Register.

2Y. DESCRIPTION OF ENVIRONMENT & OUTBUILDINGS: New sanctuary has been erected on adjacent ground

Front portion of the building retains integrity of design and period and while not architecturally significant the building has served for a long period as a house of worship for African American congregations.

2X.

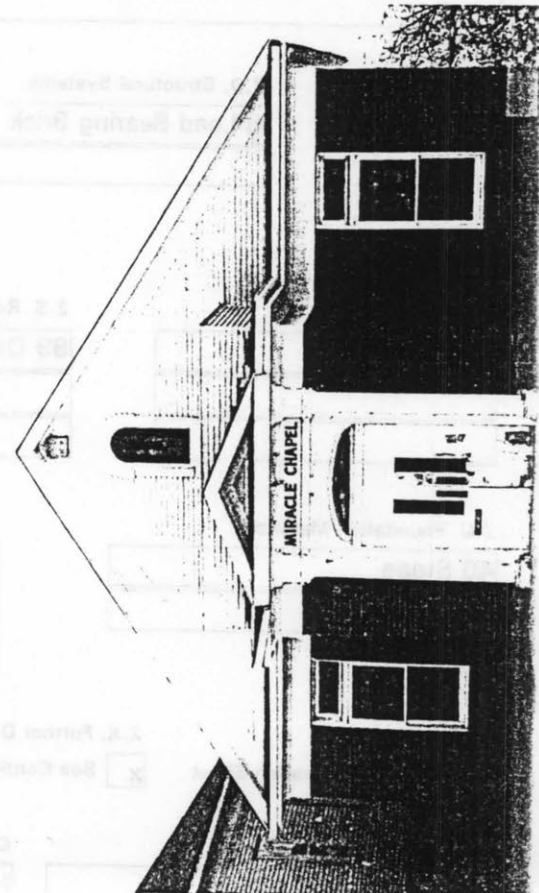

One-story gable front with enclosed entry vestibule retains elements of the Colonial Revival styling in its symmetrical fenestration, pedimented entry door supported by square pilasters and entablature; and the one-over-one double hung sashes with transoms. The use of multiple cladding materials is noteworthy for this simple design: a random ashlar foundation which covers the partially above-ground basement; the running board brick first floor and the clapboard gable. All windows including the fanlight, arched central window with wooden drip mold in the gable and rectangular windows on the first floor have stained glass panes. An attached building on the rear appears to predate the brick structure due to its brick foundation and requires more investigations as building permits could not be found to reveal the property's construction history.

Congregation Tiphered Stovad

T.

Erected in 1923 as a Jewish house of worship the facility served various Hebrew congregations until c 1950. The Hebrew congregations in Kansas City (Reformed, Orthodox, and Conservative) had their roots in immigrants from Germany, Russia, and other areas of eastern Europe. Since 1950 the facility has served numerous congregations including the East Side Church, Sacred Mission Church and the Benton Boulevard Christian Church.

2X.

This 40x75 ft. building has a flat roof, a primary entrance which is below grade, an upper portion which is composed of a wooden framed parapet clad in shingles, and a stone foundation which rises above ground level to form part of the main floor level cladding. The original windows, roof and siding were replaced in a 1965 renovation. The building has no stylistic elements that can be referenced. It is distinguished by the gable front parapet which rests on the ground/basement levels. The building appears to have been built as a basement facility and at a later time the parapet and entrance configuration added.

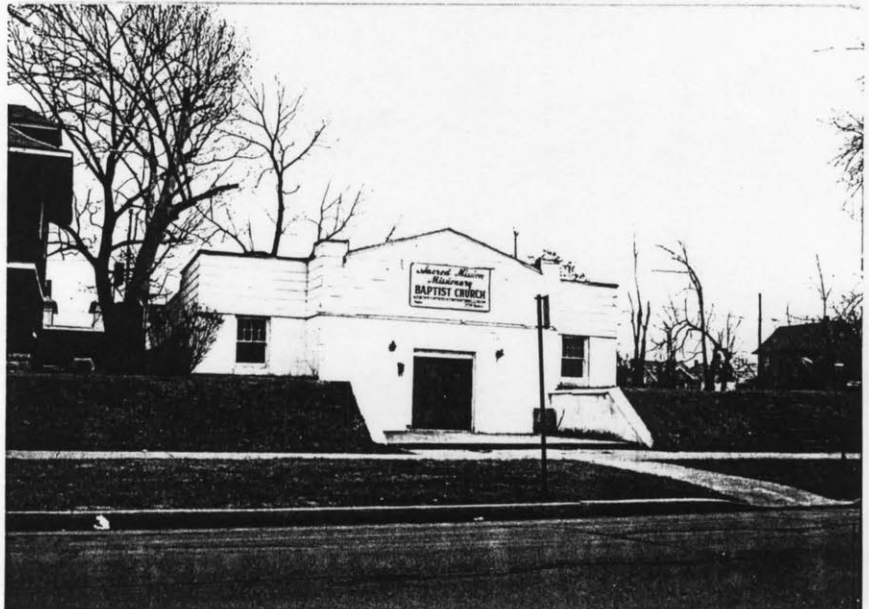

2Y.

The building sits in a residential neighborhood. In scale, massing, design and materials it does not reflect other buildings on the streetscape. In particular the wide below grade entrance with paved parking area which is cut into the terrace represents an issue of integrity of the original setting.

The building shape and ornamentation is irregular and unusual. The main building has two primary facades facing onto the public right-of-way. The long facade with gable ends is symmetrical in appearance and consists of five vertical bays divided by brick piers. The three central bays have two rectangular windows in each bay on both stories. The end bays include enclosed porches with pedimental arches of brick and cut stone over arched entries with recessed double doors. A stringcourse of cut stone separates the foundation from the ground floor level. The gable front primary facade rises 3 stories above the basement and includes a large central arch which has stone infill surrounding four bays of windows on each floor culminating in gothic tracery. Complex is a distinctive religious property type and its eclectic use of Colonial Revival stylistic elements contributes to an understanding of the use of historical eclecticism in architecture of this period as applied to specialized property types.

Styling consists of symmetrical arrangement of fenestration and bays with a gable front block and gable front end wings connected by hyphen wings. The north block composes the convent chapel which features a central nave and apse, arched windows, and an open cupola/bell tower. The south block is a new addition running north and south currently under construction. Colonial Revival detailing includes use of running bond brick, an accentuated wooden front entrance of the Colonial prototype using classic double-leaf doors and surrounds with pilasters; a one story portico composed of a classic entablature and columns and a flat roof with solid balustrade and end piers with finals; rectangular double-hung sashes with 6 over 6 lights except for the arched windows, brick flat arch lintels with narrow stone sills and keystones; brick quoins, stone water table, string courses and detailing; and hipped roof dormers. Tudoresque parapet and detailing.

2Y.

The main building and outbuildings form by virtue of the scale and interior courtyard appearance yielded by the central structure and the siting and fencing which incircle the square block area. To the rear of the structure is a heating plant with a tall smokestack and a triple-car garage/carriage house. These buildings replicated the architectural styling i.e. hipped roofs, brick cladding etc.

T. SIGNIFICANCE: This complex is a significant Classical Revival property type for religious properties i.e., group homes/convents/seminaries. The size and variety of buildings found in the complex and architectural integrity lend it significance as an individual property or as a contributing element in a district. The building is representative of the eclectic use of Colonial Revival styling.

2X. FURTHER DESCRIPTION: The architectural styling is a symmetrical arrangement of fenestration and bays arranged with a gable front block and gable front end wings connected by hyphen wings. The north block (with a wing running east) composes the convent chapel which features a central nave and apse, arched windows, and an open cupola/bell tower. On the south block (running east and west) is a new addition running north and south currently under construction. Colonial Revival detailing includes use of running bond brick, an accentuated wooden front entrance of the Colonial prototype using classic double-leaf doors and door surrounds with pilasters; a one-story portico composed of a classic entablature and columns and a flat roof with solid balustrade and end piers with finals; rectangular double-hung sashes with 6 over 6 lights (except for the arched windows of the chapel), brick flat arch lintels with narrow stone sills and keystones; brick quoins, stone water table, string courses and detailing; and hipped roof dormers. The only variation in styling is the use of a Tudoresque parapet on the end gable and the wide boxed eave overhang.

2Y. DESCRIPTION OF ENVIRONMENT& OUTBUILDINGS: The main building and outbuildings form by virtue of the scale and interior courtyard appearance yielded by the central structure and the siting and fencing which encircle the square block area. To the rear of the structure is a heating plant and with a tall smokestack and a triple car garage/carriage house. These buildings replicate the architectural styling i.e..d hipped roofs, brick cladding, rectangular double hung multi-pan windows, quoining, and dormers of the main structure.

St. Paul's Lutheran Church

095 Jackson

T.

This building operated as a house of worship for Lutherans until sometime after 1940. In 1950 it is listed as housing the Rosser-Simpson Central Methodist Episcopal church, an African-American congregation. Its use by first white and later a black congregation is illustrative of the practice in Kansas City for black congregations to lease or buy houses of worship which were previously occupied by white congregations as the population shifted and the racial and ethnic composition of neighborhoods changed. Listings in the city directories from 1870 through 1940 do not indicate that St. Paul's Lutheran Church incorporated foreign language in their services although many German and Scandanavian immigrants may have joined this church.

2X.

Extant building permits indicate that originally a 39x84 ft one-story brick building was erected in 1925 at a cost of $35,000. The styling of the building indicates that it is of this time period. It is unknown whether the one-story structure was later incorporated into this building. The building design and plan features incorporate the extensive use of brick with some cut stone detailing on piers, at the roof line and capping the stepped parapet. A rear ell which is one-half story lower projects from the back. Stylistically the building has restrained Tudoresque styling motifs, principally the use of a brick parapet which steps up to a gable configuration on the primary facade. Brick piers run two stories vertically on the corners and flanking the entrance door on the primary facade. The entrance bay created by these piers incorporates a simple one-story double door entrance. Another bay is created under the parapet "gable" which projects one brick depth from the building and originally incorporated a different window configuration than is apparent now due to incomptable infill. the rear ell appears to have gone through several remodelings which have affected the original window placement and proportions. A second story was added to the rear addition in 1951, the first story of which may have been part of the original building.

2Y.

The building is part of a residential neighborhood. Its step-back varies from later construction. It is situated on a slight rise from the street and sidewalk with concrete stairs leading up from the sidewalk. A side parking area exposes the side elevation to view.

Business Directories indicate the use of this facility as a house of worship for African-American congregations c. 1950.

2X.

This gable front church features a central cupola with pyramidal roof and cross which forms a short steeple. An enclosed central entrance porch has a gable roof and features double entrance doors. Weatherboarding covers the entire wall surfaces and extends into the gable areas and on the cupola.

2Y.

The building is located in a residential areas which has undeveloped lots and thus lesser than usual urban density. A small concrete wall with steps separates the property from the sidewalk. The building is in accordance with the setback of the other residential buildings in the streetscape.

No building permit for this property can be found. City directories indicate the presence of the AME congregation at this location dating from the turn-of-the century through 1950. The design is indicative of mid-20th century design. Because of its siting, there may be some discrepancy between the current address and that listed variously as 16th and Lydia, 1601 Lydia when actually it is closer in location to 15th and Lydia. Further research is underway and cross referencing when completed data base is assembled may indicate that it has been previously surveyed under another address.

The building has the appearance of auditorium design rather than that of a sanctuary. The rectangular plan incorporates a main meeting building with a barrel roof and an enclosed entrance area, lesser in height and with a flat roof. Shallow engaged piers separate the multi-pane, single-sash metal windows on the side elevations created seven verticle bays. The wide windows are placed on the second floor level of the building with brick recessed spandrels under them. The entrance is equally austere. a wide four-panel entrance door has a concrete cantelevered awning at the second floor level above which are centered three very narrow single sash metal frame windows with three square lights each. The entrance side of the barrel roof portion of the building is ornamented with a circular opening with ventilation louvers. The only other relief to the stretcher running bond brick work besides the verticle engaged piers is a variation in the brick work in the entrance door surrounds and in cornice areas.

2Y.

The building has corner siting and is in an area that has undergone successive stages of demolition and infill. To the rear of the building is a large mansard roofed schoolhouse which in size and massing dwarfs the building. Setback from curb is minimal and reflects commercial zoning guidelines.

The integrity of the c. 1947 Classical Revival design provides an excellent example of the refinement and simplification of the style in the post-WWII era. Aso has associations with the evolution of suburban development and community planning. Nashua was one of Kansas City northland's earliest planned suburban developments.

Full-height but less than full width, entry porch with classical pediment supported by classical columns with square capitals dominates the facade. Front-facing gable. These design elements and the symmetrical placement of the center entrance give the building the appearance of a miniature Greek temple. Other design elements consistent with the style and period of construction are the use of slender unfluted columns with simple capitals and no entablature; the simple circular fixed sash window in the pediment, double doors. Of note is the departure of windows flanking the center entrance. Other features are the use of arched and rectangular windows on the side elevations of the sanctuary and entrance hall.

2Y.

In 1959 an educational building was added to the parcel and in 1963 a parking lot

T. SIGNIFICANCE: This building may enjoy significance as a contributing element to a district. Nashua was one of Kansas City's earliest planned suburban developments, established in the "Northland" by real estate developer, William Winter in 1892. The congregation built their first church building in the community in 1890 and sold it to the Latter Day Saints in 1947. The congregation then built on a new lot in 1947 this late 20th century Neoclassical design. The design is evidence of the evolution of Neoclassical design popular in the United States from 1895-1950 and, because of its integrity, serves as an excellent example of the refinement and simplification of the style in the post World War II era.

FURTHER DESCRIPTION: The facade of this building is dominated by a full-height, but less than full width, entry porch featuring a classical pediment supported by classical columns with square capitals placed in front of a front-facing gable (a sub-type of the style). These design elements and the symmetrically placement of the center entrance doorway give the building the appearance of a miniature Greek temple. Other design elements consistent with the style and period of construction are the use of slender unfluted columns with simple capitals and no entablature; the simple entablature which forms the decorative surround of the double doors and incorporates a flat transom with a single light of stained glass; and the semi-circular fixed sash window in the pediment. The double doors feature plain panels. Of note is the departure of windows flanking the center entrance. Other distinguishing architectural features are the use of arched and rectangular windows on the side elevations of the sanctuary and entrance hall. The motif used includes a rectangular window opening surrounding a combination fixed stained glass casement and transom combination with stone lug sill, brick flat arch with cut stone keystone above which is a shaped stone inset placed in the first bay and lighting the entrance hall. Two round arch windows with semi-circular brick arches, stone keystone and end pieces, and simple stone lug sills surround a single casement of geometric patterned stained glass. Windows on the projecting side gables are double sash windows with six over twelve lights, narrow stone lug sills, and flat brick arches with a stone keystone. Brick is the predominant cladding material, utilizing running bond. A stringcourse of one course of soldier brick separates the basement from the first floor. Clapboard siding is utilized in the gables and porch pediment. A square wooden cupola with tapered spire compose the steeple which is centered over the front gable.

Becker/Millstein indicate it as originally built as a Kansas City Railway power station and later converted into a church in 1917. May be eligible in transportation related theme

The rectangular plan incorporates use of engaged pilasters supporting a massive architrave and projecting parapet which through the use of piers and brickwork gives the effect of a balustrade. The entrance facade is distinguished by five vertical bays separated by the pilasters with an arched entrance doorway located in the end bay. Simple classical unfluted, engaged columns support a hood molding and larger arch composed of brick and stonework. The only issues of integrity are the basement window openings which have brick infill and the painting of the building which, while sensitive in coloration to the Colonial Revival idiom covers the original exposed brick and patterning.

2W. PLAN: RC RECTANGLE

2Y. DESCRIPTION OF ENVIRONMENT & OUTBUILDINGS: The building completely fills the narrow lot on a residential street.

The United Baptist Church of Christ at Little Blue was established in 1832 on the principles of the Fishing River Association. Located in a small crossroads community consisting of the church, a post office and school established in eastern Jackson County along the Little Blue River, the congregation is one of the earliest in the county. The church serves as a community focal point.

2X.

The design of this rectangular gable-front one-story building with an enclosed projecting entrance porch with pyramidal roof which intersects the side of the gable front provides the effect reminiscent of a simple wooden vernacular version of a side-steeple design. The foundation is of natural faced, cut stone set in even courses. The entrance facade has an enclosed porch, plain paneled double entry doors and a window in the gable facade. The porch has windows on the side elevations which match those of the main portion of the building. The south side has 4 bays created by rectangular double-sash windows with 1/1 lights situated just below the eaves. The north side window placement is consistent with the south side.

2Y.

A new, large brick house of worship has been erected adjacent to the rear of the earlier church. The surrounding landscape retains its rural character.

City Directories indicate this building first served as the place of worship for a Jewish congregation and was one which was composed of members from eastern Europe. In the late 1940s the building served as a place of worship for an African-American Baptist Congregation. This group added sizable additions in 1961 and 1968. It is representative of the common practice of Black congregations of leasing or acquiring a religious facility used by another ethnic or racial group and represents the shifting racial composition of neighborhoods as suburban development continued in the post W.W. II era.

2X.

This religious facility is composed of two different buildings, erected approximately twenty years apart. Both utilize brick and wood with painted white trim and are variations of revival styling found in the mid 20th century church architecture. The original 2-story building was a late Classical Revival temple front style with a pedimented gable roof porch supported by round doric wooden columns, and a central door flanked by windows. The entrance level was elevated above the sidewalk by a stairs which span the full width of the porch. The later addition is actually a side steeple church utilizing Colonial/Georgian Revival styling and attached to the side of the earlier building. The scale and massing of this structure differs dramatically, particularly as to proportion, fenestration and size of window openings and entrance.

2Y.

This building is situated in one of the older neighborhoods in the city and because of its size dominates the neighborhood streetscape. The total structure covers a much larger footprint that is typical of religious building in this neighborhood historically

A significant structure associated with the White Oak Community composed of former slaves and their descendants which developed in Clay County in the late 1880s. The community began with the donation of land by Fountain Waller, a slave-owner who emigrated from Virginia to Missouri in the 1840s. Waller's will, drafted in 1882 and executed in 1885, left a little over 15.5 acres to two brothers, Anthony and Grundy Murray, who were former slaves of Waller. (The bequest has been attributed to the fact that the Murray's were descendants of Waller). Several African-American families settled on the land, built residences and small farmsteads and established benevolent associations. In addition to their social, fraternal and benevolent missions the lodge maintained a community cemetery, lodge/schoolhouse and the church. The congregation

This simple gable front rectangular church with a polygonal apse features a full basement constructed of coursed rubble limestone and is constructed of white oak. Distinguishing features are clapboard siding, symmetrical fenestration on the side elevations and a simple square cupola with a shingled spire. The original entrance porch is enclosed by a front gable addition clad in vertical plank siding. The south elevation incorporates a side entrance stairway stoop. The rear or south side features a one-story five-sided apse with a hipped roof which is covered with vertical wood planking. Close examination shows a limestone foundation and clapboard siding under the planking. On the north side of the rear facade is a limestone chimney.

The church and the cemetery are the only visible remains of the community. The Lodge hall burned in 1973, the cemetery has no markers, The general land configuration as it relates to the creek and other topographical features still yield evidence of elements of the community.

T. SIGNIFICANCE: The Mt. Olive Baptist Church is an individually significant structure associated with the White Oak Community, a community of former slaves and their descendants which developed in Clay County in the late 1880s. The community had its beginnings with the donation of land by Fountain Waller, a slave-owner who emigrated from Virginia to Missouri in the 1840s. Waller's will, drafted in 1882 and executed in 1885 upon his death, left a little over 15 1/2 acres to two brothers, Anthony and Grundy Murray, who were former slaves of Waller. (The bequest has been attributed to the fact that the Murray's were descendants of Waller.) Several African-American families settled on the land, built residences and small farmsteads and established benevolent associations such as the White Oak Grove Benevolent Society (aka White Oak Benevolent Society) and the United Sons and Daughters [and Sons] of Peace [number one]. In addition to their social, fraternal and benevolent missions, the lodges maintained the community cemetery. The community quickly grew to include a cemetery, a two-story lodge building (also used as a school house) and a church and served as the center of social and religious activities for African American families within a five mile radius. The White Oak church building, first known as the Mt. Olive Chapel was built around 1912. The congregation had formed in the mid-1880s and met in a nearby residence until they could erect their church. The carpenter/builder was Horace Hickman, a member of the church. Hickman used white oak sawn at the nearby mill of Nat Murray, another member of the congregation. At its peak the congregation never reached over 200 members. Various organizations were formed within the church such as the missionary society which met once a month and went from house to house, serving dinners, making quilts and clothing for the benefit of the church. Members were baptized in a small creek nearby. Among the families who were members were the Murrays, Hickmans, Shields, Blacks, Wallers, Johnsons, Howards, Walkers, Gipsons, Jacksons. After World War II, many of the original members were deceased and the war had dispersed many of their descendants.

Distinguishing features are clapboard siding, symmetrical fenestration on the side elevations and a simple square cupola with a shingled spire. The original entrance porch has is enclosed by a front gable addition clad in vertical plank siding. a small entrance stoop with a gabled projecting roof supported by brackets in centered in entrance facade. The south elevation has a partially exposed basement, three rectangular windows with plain surrounds, double-hung sashes with one over one lights. The rear bay incorporates a side entrance stairway stoop with a single door with flat transom. The north side features four windows identical to those on the south side. The rear or south side features a one story five-sided apse with a hipped roof which is covered with vertical wood planking. Close examination shows a limestone foundation and clapboard siding underneath the planking. On the north side of the rear facade is a limestone chimney. The building has a full basement, partially exposed. The sanctuary has a center aisle, originally flanked by pews and a choir area in the apse behind the altar. Integrity issues include the removal of the original porch roof which was a gable front with stickwork and supporting brackets and a failing roof which is in need of replacement.

Congregation originally built on property in 1908 a frame building known as the Clark Chapel M.E. New Hope Baptist Church made alterations to the interior in 1947. In 1958 the building was demolished and a new one-story 50x70 ft. stone and block building was erected "to be a church." This location was the site of houses of worship for African-American congregations from c. 1930 - 1950.

Principle architectural features are the use of an entrance gable with two connected intersecting side gable ells; dark dressed stone; central double doors centered in the front gable flanked by projecting piers with stone trim which run the height of the building and surround the double-hung window sash centered over the main entrance. Smaller double-hung sash windows flank the entrance bay. There appears to have been some infill in these areas with smaller window frames than in the original 1953 design.

2Y.

Building is located in a residential area and in size and massing is somewhat compatible with the early to mid 20th century architecture. The building is located on a fairly steep terrace with steps leading up the terrace to the central entrance door.

The building is listed in the 1950 business directory as an African-American house of worship. The property is presently abandoned, and was once a combination residence and commercial building. As such it is typical of commercial store-front property type utilized by small groups, particularly African-Americans as worship facilities. No building permit could be found for the property. Due to its lack of integrity, no further research as to its previous use was conducted.

The building is composed of two segments. The 2-story brick commercial front and a 1-story wooden frame rear addition. The simple commercial brick building has a large window display-entrance opening which originally had a multi-paned transom extending the width of the entrance/window and to the side a small segmental arched window. The second story window openings consist four windows with stone sills and lintels. The center two are vertically longer in dimension than those flanking them. The windows are boarded. The display window and entrance are open and only the framing and part of the transom lights remain. The brick work on the end of the commercial building indicates the attachment at some previous date of another building. The flat roof is surrounded by a shallow parapet. There is a rear side chimney. The attached frame building to the rear appears to be an earlier residential structure. The only distinguishable historic fabric are the narrow late 19th or early 20th century windows with double hung sashes and the end gable configuration. There is a side entrance.

2Y.

This neighborhood is part of a long-standing African American community and is adjacent to the 18th and Vine National Register District. It is an area that has suffered significant erosion to its integrity in setting and is composed of a wide array of residential and small commercial buildings and structures.

A frame church built by the Tabernacle Missionary Baptist Church in 1923 originally was located at this site and was replaced in 1925-26 by a new concrete block building erected by the African American congregation. In 1962 the building was extensively remodeled by the congregation.

2X.

Design features include recessed bays created by concrete block engaged piers and a awning-like projection over the double entrance door. Here a hipped roof projects from the gable of the building and is supported by a brick wall with a central opening. On top of this is situated a small conical spire. The front gable facade is noteworthy for the lack of openings except the entrance doors. Other window openings reflect the time of alteration and are either long rectangular multi-paned or small horizontal half-windows, typical of those found on basement levels.

2Y.

The building is situated in a residential neighborhood. Its setback and orientation mimics that of residential architecture on the streetscape. A side parking lot abuts the building. The entrance is raised above grade by a sloping terrace and elevated stairs. A small concrete block wall separates the yard from the sidewalk.

No building permit or data on this building could be found other than the entry in the 1950 Buisness Directory of the Jewish Congregation being located here. City business directories show the synagog located at 705 Tracy in 1930 and at 2001 Linwood in 1940. It is possible that because of its corner location this building is listed in pbulic records at another address. Final data runs from the data base will be included in final report.

This building incorporates stylistic devices of the Tudor Revival style. The Wabash facade is two stories with an additional stepped third story to the rear. The flat roof is surrounded by a parapet capped in stone and distinguished by a stone stringcourse at the roof line. Between the roof line and the top of the parapet is a patterned brick work which utilizes brick headers that contrasts with the stretcher courses on the lower stories. Window and door openings are of symmetrical arrangments. Flanking the entrance are two small semi-elliptical arched windows with double hung sashes and 2 over 2 lights. On the second floor two windows with double hung six over one sashes flank the entrance bay. The plain window surrounds have stone tabs on the sides. The long side elevations of the building are distinguished by stepped buttresses with triangular stone capping. The side facing onto the street has a central entrance bay with stone surrounds that stretches two stories and single and ribbon window arrangements.

2Y.

The building is located on the corner of a residential neighborhood. The set back facing Wabash is in keeping with the residential step back. The entrance off the sidewalk consists of four steps flanked by stone stoops. The set-back of the building on the side street does not conform with that of residences on down the block and reflects commercial rather than residential placement.
