Summary

The Perry County Courthouse, located at 15 West Sainte Marie Street in Perryville, Perry County, Missouri was designed in 1904 by architect John W. Gaddis and constructed by Caldwell & Drake. The two-and-one-half story red brick Romanesque Revival style courthouse sits at the center of a one-block raised grass lawn public square within the historic commercial downtown of Perryville. Concrete pedestrian paths lead from the public sidewalk that bounds the square to a centered entrance on each elevation. A non-contributing wood gazebo sits at the southeast corner of the square, and several stone memorials dot the north quadrants of the lawn. In total, there is one contributing building (the courthouse), and three contributing objects: a King's Highway granite marker (1917), a Civil War Union Soldier monument (1923), and a memorial stone to Captain Raymond Littge of the United States Air Force (mid-20th century). There is one non-contributing structure (gazebo) and two non-contributing objects, a Perry County War memorial and a memorial stone to Jim Froemsdorf of the Missouri State Highway Patrol. All non-contributing resources were constructed within the past fifty years. The rectangular courthouse has a native limestone foundation and a hipped roof with a centered cross-gable wing on each elevation. The entrance on each elevation is sheltered by a portico supported with Tuscan columns. A prominent bell and clock tower rises from the center of the roof. The first two floors have tall rectangular multi-light windows with flat arch lintel moldings. The upper half-story has Roman arched windows set within the central cross-gables. The wider north and south elevations have a gabled dormer on each side of the cross-gable. Two Roman arched windows are set within each dormer. The eaves of the gables and dormers are clad with asbestos shingles. The courthouse's exterior design remains largely unchanged. Historic balustrades denoting second-floor balconies, set on top of each first-floor portico, have been removed. The first floor interior layout was altered in 1966 and 1977 to create additional rooms and update plumbing, heating, and air conditioning. An elevator was installed in 1987. The Perry County Courthouse retains integrity of design, materials, location, setting, feeling, and association, and conveys local significance in the areas of Architecture and Politics/Government.

Elaboration

Setting:

Perry County, Missouri is located in the southeastern area of the state, with the Mississippi River forming the county's eastern border and the border between Missouri and Illinois (Figure 3). Ste. Genevieve County is to the north, St. Francois and Madison Counties are to the west, and Bollinger and Cape Girardeau Counties are to the south. The Perry County Courthouse is located in the historic commercial downtown area of Perryville, the county seat. Perryville is centrally located in Perry County and in 2014 had a population of approximately 8,400.¹ State Highway 61 is about .4 miles to the east and Interstate Highway 55 is about 2 miles to the west (Figure 4).

The Perry County Courthouse sits at the center of a 1.2-acre green lawn, forming a public square that rises slightly above the surrounding streetscape. The courthouse and the lawn are within the National Register boundary. Historic one-part and two-part commercial block buildings are on the streets surrounding the square. The public square (230 feet long on each side) is bound by West Sainte Marie Street to the north, Main Street to the east, West St. Joseph Street to the south, and Jackson Street to the west (Figure 1). Concrete public sidewalks, streetlamps, and diagonal parking spots line the perimeter of the square. On each side of the square, a set of concrete steps and a concrete pedestrian path extend from the sidewalk to the entrance on each elevation (Photo 1). Deciduous trees dot the lawn on the south, east and west sides of the courthouse, while the north edge of the lawn is landscaped with a continuous row of deciduous trees. The north lawn of the courthouse has several memorial objects typically seen in courthouse square settings. These are described as follows.

King’s Highway (El Camino Real) Marker, 1917 - contributing object

Figures 1, 22

This red granite marker faces northwest and was erected in 1917 in the northwest quadrant of the public square by the Missouri Daughters of the American Revolution. This approximately 5-foot-tall marker notes the location of the former King’s Highway, also known as El Camino Real, which ran through Perryville on a route from New Madrid, Missouri, to St. Louis.

Capt. Raymond Littge Memorial, mid-20th century – contributing object

Figures 1, 22

This seven-foot-tall rectangular smooth granite memorial faces northwest and is located south of the King’s Highway Marker in the northwest quadrant of the public square. It memorializes Captain Raymond Littge of the United States Air Force, who died in service in 1949. It is estimated to have been placed on the square in the mid-twentieth century.

Perry County War Memorial – non-contributing object

This memorial faces north and is located to the east of the Littge memorial in the northwest quadrant of the public square. It features five smooth granite markers ranging from 10 to 15 feet tall, all set on a concrete patio with two flagpoles and two granite benches. The memorial is dedicated to citizens of Perry County who died in service during WWI, WWII, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War. Due to its recent construction, the memorial is classified as a non-contributing object.

Union Soldier Monument, 1923 – contributing object

This ten-foot-tall granite monument faces north as is located in front of the north entrance to the courthouse. The base of the monument features text dedicating it in memory of Perry County's Union soldiers of the Civil War; a sculpture of a Union soldier sits on top of the monument. It was placed on the square in 1923 by the Sons of Veterans and Auxiliary.

Jim Froemsdorf Memorial, c. 1986 – non-contributing object

Figures 1, 21

This red granite marker faces north and is placed in the northeast quadrant of the public square. The rough-cut edges of the marker frame its smooth front which features text dedicating it in recognition of Jim Froemsdorf of the Missouri State Highway Patrol, who died in service in 1985. It is estimated to have been placed on the courthouse lawn in the late 1980s and thus is classified as non-contributing.

Wood gazebo – non-contributing structure

Figures 1, 24

This non-contributing octagonal wood gazebo is of recent construction and is located at the southeast corner of the courthouse square on a concrete base.

Perry County Courthouse, 1904 – contributing building

The Romanesque Revival style Perry County Courthouse is a dignified two-and-one-half story red brick building with a rectangular footprint, a full basement, and a central clock and bell tower that rises from a hipped roof (Figure 6-7). The north and south elevations, at about 92 feet in length, are slightly longer than the 65-foot-long east and west elevations. The courthouse has a native limestone foundation with bush-hammered facing and red brick walls that are two wythes thick on the elevations and three wythes thick on the tower (Photo 4). All elevations are symmetrical and feature a slightly projecting two-story centered cross-gable with a one-story portico with Tuscan columns that shelters the entrance (Figure 6). The interior roofs of the porticos are clad with historic tin panels (Photo 5). All entrances remain open except for the south entrance, which was sealed in 1992 to accommodate interior alterations (Photo 18).

The central tower is square-shaped with a pyramidal roof (Photo 1, 15). Each side of the tower features paired 1/1 windows with a limestone lintel course topped with a Roman-arched opening with a wood balustrade and prominent central keystone. The corners of the tower are articulated with rectangular brick posts that terminate with pyramid-shaped finals clad with aluminum. The pyramidal roof of the belfry features an aluminum-clad projecting gable on each side. The peaks are topped with delicate finials, and under the eave of each gable is an operating clock face with Roman numerals. The windows of the tower were installed in 1973, and the clock faces, purchased from I.T. Verdin, were replaced in 1985. Once clad with galvanized iron, the belfry was re-clad with aluminum in 2005. The large galvanized finial that once topped the belfry and the original bell are still stored inside the tower (Photo 14).

North Elevation:

The north elevation of the Perry County Courthouse functions as the primary façade, and as further indication, the lawn in front of the elevation has been decorated with various memorials (Photo 19). The symmetrical façade is divided into five bays. The outermost and central bays extend slightly forward. The basement level is partially visible, and window openings are filled with glass block. A stone water table tops the basement level. From left to right, the first and fifth bays each have two tall rectangular windows with four lights on the first and second stories. The second and fourth bays have one window on the first and second stories. The windows feature a continuous stone sill course with brick dentils, and individual flat-arched painted stone lintels (Figure 23). The central (third) bay is characterized by a two-story cross gable. Modern, aluminum paired doors with aluminum and glass sidelights and transom comprise the entrance. A one-story, flat-roof portico set on four limestone piers shelters the entrance. Stone lattice knee-walls topped with stone balustrades bridge the space between the piers (Photo 3). Each pier is topped with a stone Tuscan column. The roof of the portico on each elevation was once enclosed with decorative iron knee-walls to form a balcony; this feature has since been removed on all of them. The second story of the third bay has three windows with a shared flat-arch stone window hood. The upper half-story features three Roman-arched windows with a stone lintel and sill course. The gable cornice is articulated with metal coping and a metal finial. The eave is clad with asbestos fishscale shingles. The upper half-story of the outer (first and fifth) bays feature a projecting gabled dormer. Each dormer contains two Roman-arched windows with stone lintel and sill courses. The gable of each dormer features metal coping, a metal finial, and asbestos shingles, mimicking the central cross-gable on a smaller scale.

East Elevation:

The east and west elevations are shorter than the north and south elevations (Photo 1). A modern accessibility ramp wraps the southeast corner of the building. The east elevation has three bays. The outer bays contain two windows on the first and second stories. The central cross-gabled bay projects slightly forward. The entrance is comprised of paired aluminum and glass doors with glass sidelights and transoms. The portico on the east and west entrances are also slightly smaller than those on the north and south entrances. The flat-roofed portico is set on two stone piers topped with stone Tuscan columns. The entrance is flanked by single windows on the first story. The second story of the central bay features a set of paired windows with a shared stone flat-arched window hood over the entrance, flanked by single windows. The upper half story has two Roman-arched windows; these are modern replacements from the 1990s. The gable cornice is articulated with metal coping and a metal finial, and the gable eave is clad with asbestos shingles.

South Elevation:

The design, cladding and fenestration of the south elevation is identical to the north (Photo 18, Figure 2). The primary difference is that the entrance on the south elevation was closed in the 1990s to accommodate interior alterations. The modern paired aluminum and glass doors, transoms, and sidelights are still visible. A brick chimney rises from the building between the fourth and fifth (from left to right) bays. An accessibility ramp is located at the southeast corner of the building. The ramp leads to an entrance in the basement of the building.

West Elevation:

The west elevation is identical to the east elevation (Photo 17). The cornerstone is visible at the northwest corner of the building.

Interior:

The courthouse interior can be accessed via entrances on the north, east, and west elevations. An accessibility ramp on the south elevation leads to a basement entrance. Corridors from the north, east, and west first-floor entrances lead to the center of the building and meet under a twelve-foot square light well (Figures 8-12, Photos 9-11). The interior floors are historic green and white hexagonal tiles, and the plaster walls are painted white (Photo 7). Several historic decorative plaster moldings from the Decorators Supply Company in Chicago are extant throughout (Photo 9). Historic stairs with an original newel post leading up to the second floor and down to the basement are located within the vestibule of the east entrance (Photo 6). An elevator, located just beyond the stairs, was installed in 1987. The layout of the first floor was altered in 1992 to accommodate additional offices (see Figure 11). The southeast quadrant of the first floor contains the Office of the Circuit Clerk. Inside this office hangs an original clock bought for the building when it was furnished in 1904. The first floor also contains the Office of the Associate Circuit Court, private judge's chambers, a private client consultation room, and file storage space. The southwest quadrant of the first floor houses the courtroom, and the northwest section contains the Office of the Recorder of Deeds. The Recorder of Deeds office has a walk-in steel vault that houses county, military, land, and marriage records (Photo 8). Another historic set of stairs is located in the north entrance vestibule.

The basement of the courthouse contains public men's and women's restrooms in the eastern section. The rest of the basement is divided into rooms which once housed various offices but are now used primarily for file storage. The courthouse foundation is visible in a 21' by 13' vault used for storing private records. In the early 1960s the heating system for the courthouse was converted from coal to a boiler. In the late 1960s, air conditioning and electric heating was installed.

The southeast section of the second floor contains the Office of the County Public Administrator a library (Figures 10,12). The second floor also has a courtroom and public seating space in the central corridor around the light well (Photos 10-11). This courtroom has served as the primary courtroom since the courthouse was constructed. The upper half-story contains the courthouse attic and bell and clock tower (Photos 12-13). The unfinished attic is used for storage, including that of the original clock works and the metal finial that crowned the tower. A set of wooden stairs leads up into the tower. The platform where the bell was once installed is extant; the bell itself is stored in the attic. A ladder is used to access the belfry that houses the clock works, replaced in 1985 (Photo 16).

Integrity:

The Perry County Courthouse retains integrity and conveys significance in the areas of architecture and politics. The historic setting and location of the courthouse is intact; it remains in the center of a one-block public square. The square is flanked on all sides by historic one- and two-story commercial block buildings; this communicates the historic feeling of a courthouse square within a small-town business district. Memorial objects have been installed on the north side of the lawn throughout the twentieth century, as is common in courthouse square settings. Three of these objects (a red granite King's Highway marker, a Civil War Union Soldier monument, and a granite memorial to Captain Littge of the United States Air Force) are contributing resources, as they were built during the period of significance and underscore the courthouse's significance as a political symbol. A modern gazebo built at the southeast corner of the square is a non-contributing structure that does not detract from the historic setting because it is comparatively small in size. The Perry County War Memorial and the Jim Froemsdorf memorial on the north lawn of the square are also non-contributing because they are less than fifty years old. Their presence on the square is in keeping with the traditional use of courthouse squares to memorialize persons and events important to the community. The historic exterior design of the courthouse is largely maintained and there are no exterior additions. The windows and entrance doors have been replaced, but these alterations are compatible with the historic design and do not negate integrity. The interior layout has also been altered to accommodate modern HVAC and accessibility needs as the court system and county duties expanded. The current layout does not differ extremely from the historic layout, and the interior still conveys the political significance of the building. Historic workmanship is evident in the Romanesque Revival style traits of the building as a whole. Integrity of association is extremely strong; the Perry County Courthouse has served as the building from which the local government has operated since 1904.

Summary

The Perry County Courthouse, located at 15 West Sainte Marie Street in Perryville, Perry County, Missouri, is significant at the local level under Criterion A for its role as the primary center of politics and government within the county, and under Criterion C in the area of architecture. The two-and-one-half story red brick Romanesque Revival-style courthouse was built in 1904 in the center of a courthouse square in Perryville, the county seat. Since its construction, the Perry County Courthouse has served as the base from which the functions and services of the county's local government and judicial system have been carried out. It is the oldest existing symbol of political power and law in Perry County. Perry County was legally formed on November 16, 1820 and Perryville (located in the central area of the county) was developed as the county seat in 1822. Throughout its continued use as a center of local government, the courthouse has contained courtrooms, judge's chambers, fireproof vaults for storing county records, and offices in which local officials can carry out assigned duties. The courthouse interior's layout was somewhat altered in 1987 to enhance accessibility, and again in 1992 to accommodate an office expansion for the growth of the county court system. Designed by architect J.W. Gaddis, the nominated courthouse is prominently situated at the center of a public square within the historic commercial business district of Perryville and is a significant local example of the Romanesque Revival style. Its red brick walls, heavy limestone foundation, cross-gables articulated with metal coping and decorative finials, entrance porticos with Tuscan columns, Roman-arched window openings, and prominent central bell and clock tower express the characteristics of the Romanesque Revival style. The National Register boundary includes the courthouse and the 230' by 230' square in which it is located. Five memorial objects are located on the north side of the square's lawn. Three of these (a King's Highway marker, a Union Soldier monument, and a memorial to an Air Force pilot) are contributing objects, designed and placed on the courthouse lawn within the period of significance. They support the significance of the Perry County Courthouse as a center of local government and a symbol of democracy. They also reflect the shared cultural perception of the courthouse square as a place of community in which historical events are memorialized. The other two memorial objects are less than fifty years old and thus are non-contributing; there is also non-historic wood gazebo in the southeast corner of the square that is a non-contributing structure. The period of significance of the Perry County Courthouse begins in 1904 with the building's construction and ends in 1965, the 50-year closing date in which activities begun historically continue to be important, but no more specific date to end the historic period can be defined. The Perry County Courthouse retains integrity and aptly communicates its political and architectural significance.

Historical Background and Political Significance

Early accounts of white settlement in the Perry County area describe pioneers arriving in 1794 from Pennsylvania and Kentucky.² On November 16, 1820, almost thirty years after this early wave of white settlers arrived, Perry County, Missouri, was legally formed by the legislature.³ The county was named after Oliver Hazard Perry, a United States naval commander recognized for his service in the War of 1812. When Missouri became a state on August 10, 1821, Perry County was one of twenty-five recognized counties.⁴ (Figure 2). Missouri's first state constitution implemented rules regarding counties; justices of the peace had to be appointed, a sheriff and coroner had to be elected, and an "inferior tribunal," also known as a county court, had to be established.⁵ The county courts were legally authorized to transact county business, appoint minor county officials, and implement probate matters; thus, they operated as administrative arms of the state.⁶

Perry County's county court was organized on May 21, 1821, in the log cabin of settler Bede Moore, located about 2.5 miles north of modern-day Perryville.⁷ Within Moore's cabin, three judges of the court were assigned: Louis Cissell, D.L. Caldwell, and Samuel Anderson. Cornelius N. Slattery was designated the first clerk of the court, Robert T. Brown was the first sheriff, and Joseph Tucker was the appointed assessor.⁸ The men created three townships, named Bois Brule, Brazeau, and Cinque Homme.⁹ Missouri's first state constitution also created a supreme court and assigned jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases to circuit courts.¹⁰ The circuit court of Perry County was organized on June 4, 1821.¹¹ The court's first case occurred that year, in which Judge Barnabas Burnes charged James Parker with passing counterfeit bank notes.¹²

County commissioners, which included Sheriff Brown, Assessor Tucker, and a settler named Thomas Riney, were tasked with locating a county seat.¹³ In 1822, the commissioners chose a centrally-located, 51-acre tract of land donated by Bernard Layton.¹⁴ While the donation of land was certainly a factor in the commissioners' decision, the land was also centrally located within Perry County, and a centrally-located county seat was a stipulation within the 1820 legislative act that enabled the creation of the county (Figure 13).¹⁵ The commissioners named the newly-chosen county seat Perryville.

Perryville was surveyed and platted by William McLane, and fifty-three town lots were sold at public auction to encourage settlement and to raise the funds for the construction of a courthouse.¹⁶ As is common when a county seat is established in a newly-formed location (rather than integrated into an existing village) Perryville was platted into a grid plan with a one-block central square reserved for a courthouse.¹⁷ A log jail was erected on the courthouse square immediately, designating the physical space as a center of law.¹⁸ The courts had to meet in rented rooms until Perry County's first courthouse was built in August of 1826.¹⁹ The courthouse, constructed by Thomas Hayden, was a two-story log building and cost $1,486.25 to erect.²⁰ Now from an established public building, the appointed Perry County officials and courts could exert control over local matters, enforce the law, and provide a framework for citizens to engage in legal procedures.

The concept of a county was brought to the American colonies by English settlers, as exhibited in the division of the Virginia colony in 1634 into six counties.²¹ Especially in the middle and southern colonies, Colonial-era settlers accepted the establishment of counties as a viable form of government particularly well-suited for rural areas with scattered populations. The 1803 Louisiana Purchase by the United States opened up a large western frontier for settlement. As American pioneer families (predominantly from Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia) and European immigrants made their way into the frontier, the county government was implemented as a way to subdivide land into defined political and geographical units.²² Cultural geographer Milton Newton argues that the white pioneer settlers of the frontier derived a sense of security and control through the establishment of a county government, which was typically comprised of fellow prominent white male settlers.²³

The formation of Perry County reflects these historical events of frontier settlement and the implementation of county government as a way to apply order to both the geographic composition of the land and to the lives of the multitude of arriving settlers. In 1830, four years after the construction of Perry County's first courthouse, the county population was recorded as 3,349.²⁴ In the following decade, waves of French Catholic and German Lutheran immigrants settled in Perry County, increasing the population to 5,769 in 1840.²⁵ In 1860, the population had risen to 9,128²⁶; it can be inferred that, in response to the increasing arrival of settlers, Perry County's local officials and courts had an increasing number of responsibilities to the public and legal decisions to make. By 1859, a new, larger courthouse was needed.

Perry County's second courthouse was constructed in the public square in 1859 for $8,000, under the supervision of John R. Layton (Figure 14).²⁷ The new brick courthouse was a two-story rectangular temple-front building with a gabled roof, tall rectangular windows, and brick pilasters rising up to a dentiled pediment.²⁸ By this time, one- and two-story commercial businesses were located on the opposite side of the streets bounding the courthouse square; these businesses faced inward towards the courthouse, reinforcing its visual prominence. During the Civil War, through which Perryville suffered considerably less damage than neighboring counties, the town had a population of about 300 and had sixty businesses, including banks, hotels, general stores, and mills.²⁹ Perryville's population increased to over 500 by 1870 and to 754 in 1880.³⁰

As the city grew, Perry County's local government and court system served the citizens in various ways, including deciding criminal cases, issuing important documentation, and settling civil disputes. In 1863, John May was found guilty of treason for having "taken up arms and levied war against the provisional government of Missouri."³¹ The county issued Civil War discharge certificates in 1865; these records are currently housed in the nominated courthouse. In 1867, Charles A. Weber, as the Judge of Probate for Perry County, issued land patents.³² In 1870, the county courts ordered compensation for labor on the Sabbath day, payable to John Christian Shrader for cutting wheat and to Frederic Ditrich for hauling hay.³³ Litigation, issuance of land patents, war discharge certificates, and orders for compensation are just a few examples of the powers bestowed to the county government and judicial system to govern the citizens of Perry County.

Between 1860 and 1900, the population of Perry County increased by slightly more than 6,000 residents, bringing the total population up to 15,134.³⁴ Grand jury reports in 1900 indicated that the 1859 courthouse was beyond repair.³⁵ It can be reasonably assumed that the county government was in need of a larger building from which to operate. Within the latter half of the 1800s, courthouse plans in general grew larger, reflecting the need for specific rooms to accommodate the growing list of defined county officials fulfilling the expanding duties of county government.³⁶ In September 1903, Perry County voters approved a $30,000 bond issue to finance the construction of a new courthouse to replace the 1859 courthouse.³⁷ The county solicited architectural proposals, and eventually chose the design of J.W. Gaddis, an architect from Vincennes, Indiana.³⁸ Caldwell & Drake of Columbus, Indiana, were hired to construct the new building. Construction began promptly in February of 1904. On June 4, 1904, many citizens of Perry County attended the laying of the courthouse cornerstone (Figures 15-16). The governing officials and courts of Perry County moved into the new courthouse on November 17, 1904. The total cost of the red brick Romanesque Revival-style building was $31,819.00.³⁹ The 1859 courthouse stood in the shadow of the new landmark for a short time; by 1911, it was demolished (Figures 17-18). The courthouse's location within a public square at the center of the commercial downtown ensured it a prominent status in Perryville's built environment (Figure 19). This visual and symbolic prominence has been maintained in the 111 years since the courthouse was constructed. It has continually served as the center of Perry County's government and court system since 1904, and due to its location, size, function, and high style, has continued to be a significant architectural example in Perryville's built environment.

Government officials that have worked in the Perry County Courthouse throughout the twentieth century include county court judges, probate judges, county and circuit clerks, magistrates, sheriffs, assessors, treasurers, collectors of revenue, auditors, coroners, surveyors, recorders of deeds, superintendents of schools, county health nurses, highway engineers, and prosecuting attorneys.⁴⁰ In the twentieth century, Missouri county courts evolved into administrative and supervisory legal bodies, and came to be classified under terms like "county board of commissioners" or "county board of supervisors."⁴¹ As a political unit of the state, Perry County Courthouse officials provided citizens with various services, including law enforcement, construction and maintenance of roads, health and welfare services, the recording and retention of legal documents, and fulfilled judicial functions through the court system. Since 1904, Perry County's citizens have visited the nominated courthouse to request, receive, and engage in these services and functions, making the courthouse the most important symbol of the political system in the county.

Within commonly shared spaces such as a courthouse square, it is typical for citizens to erect memorials that pay tribute to various aspects of history important to the community. The act of designating a memorial on ground that is charged with political symbolism is a reflection of the political significance of the courthouse itself. On the Perry County Courthouse square, there are three historical monuments that contribute to the political significance of the courthouse. The oldest is a red granite marker erected in 1917 by the Missouri Daughters of the American Revolution to mark the location of the King's Highway, a route that traveled from New Madrid, Missouri, through Perryville and onward to St. Louis. The next is a 1923 Union Soldier monument, placed on the courthouse grounds by the Sons of Veterans and Auxiliary. The third contributing object is a tall granite marker placed in the mid-twentieth century that memorializes Captain Raymond Littge of the United States Air Force, who died in service in 1949. Littge was born in Perry County in 1923.⁴² Within the past fifty years, citizens of Perry County have continued to interpret the courthouse grounds as a shared space in which to commemorate history, as additional memorials have been placed on the grounds.

Architectural Significance

When the Perry County Courthouse was constructed in 1904, the Romanesque Revival style was well-represented in the aesthetic designs of large buildings (commonly churches, rail terminals, courthouses, and libraries) across the country.⁴³ The Romanesque Revival style gained favor in the United States in the late Victorian era. Influenced by the architecture of the Romans, the style employed semi-circular round arched openings, rough-cut masonry, flat lintels, a steeply-pitched hipped roof, cross gables, decorative roof coping and finials, and a tall cylindrical or pyramidal tower.⁴⁴ The combination of these characteristics imparted a sense of massiveness that architects found appropriate for public buildings. In particular, the designs of architect Henry Hobson Richardson initiated the spread of the style in the United States. Richardson's 1884 design for the Allegheny County Courthouse in Pennsylvania is credited with inspiring similar Romanesque designs for courthouses across the nation.⁴⁵

In Missouri, the Romanesque Revival style was particularly popular from the 1890s into the first decade of the 1900s.⁴⁶ From 1889 to 1906, Romanesque Revival-style features were used in seventeen of the thirty-three Missouri county courthouses built in that time frame.⁴⁷ When Perry County Courthouse architect J.W. Gaddis designed the building in 1904, his use of the Romanesque Revival style for the courthouse was a reflection of the nation's perception of the style as appropriate for public buildings. Gaddis' work as an architect focused mainly on the planning and design of courthouses and public buildings.⁴⁸ After graduating from the Illinois School of Architecture, Gaddis moved to Vincennes, Indiana and established a practice. His practice was located within a bank, which he designed in the central area of Vincennes. The 1904 courthouse in Perry County, Missouri, is one of the earlier courthouse commissions of Gaddis' career. In 1891, Gaddis designed a courthouse with a tall clock tower in Wayne County, Illinois.⁴⁹ In 1898, Gaddis then designed a Richardsonian Romanesque red brick courthouse, also with an imposing clock tower, in Crawford County, Illinois.⁵⁰ His 1904 design for the Perry County Courthouse in Missouri imparted a more restrained example of Romanesque Revival. One year later, in 1905, Gaddis had strayed from the Romanesque Revival style and designed a Neo-classical Revival style Putnam County Courthouse in Greencastle, Indiana; in 1906, he designed another Classical Revival style courthouse for Huntington County, Indiana.⁵¹ Gaddis' 1912 Clay County Courthouse in Brazil, Indiana, located less than 100 miles from Vincennes, solidified his local reputation as a distinguished architect.⁵²

The two-and-one-half story red brick and rough-faced limestone Perry County Courthouse communicated the Romanesque Revival style in its steeply-pitched cross-gables, Roman-arched windows, decorative metal coping and finials, flat limestone lintels, and tall pyramid-roofed clock and bell tower. The majority of the exterior architectural features of the Perry County Courthouse have been retained. When first constructed, the flat-roofed portico on each elevation was topped with a balcony with a galvanized iron balustrade. The north and south balcony balustrades featured a pediment with a stamped metal swag motif. The balconies were removed in the late twentieth century; the porticoes remain. The eaves of the prominent cross-gables on each elevation and the dormer windows on the north and south elevations also featured a stamped metal cartouche with floral embellishments. These were also removed in the twentieth century. However, the primary characteristics that embody the Romanesque Revival style are still present in the building, and no other building in Perryville better represents the style.

The architectural significance of the Perry County Courthouse is enhanced by its setting and planned location in the center of a courthouse square. Since Perryville was developed as the county seat, county commissioners platted the town with the knowledge that a county courthouse would be located there. It was very common in Missouri for county seats to be platted using a grid-based courthouse square configuration.⁵³ This arrangement put the courthouse, as the grandest building in the county, on at least one full city block, surrounded by streets lined with the town's major commercial businesses, enclosing the block on all sides.⁵⁴ Courthouse historian Marian Ohman further classifies the courthouse square design into several sub-types; the most popular of these in Missouri is the "Shelbyville" square, derived from an example of the design identified in Shelbyville, Tennessee in 1810.⁵⁵ Perryville was platted in the Shelbyville square design, with a central 230' by 230' square centered within a grid, with commercial buildings on the lots of the streets surrounding the square facing inward towards the courthouse. The Shelbyville square is documented as having been established in 57 of the 114 county seats from the 1820s through 1861.⁵⁶ (Figure 5). The courthouse square plan can be seen as a particularly effective design for governmental buildings, such as county courthouses, because it creates a cloistered, intimate space that can be accentuated with grass, trees, benches, bandstands or gazebos, and memorials. The pleasing, park-like setting of the courthouse square nurtures the sense of a common ground shared among citizens, thus reflecting the most basic ideals of a democracy.⁵⁷

Conclusion

The 111-year-old Perry County Courthouse in Perryville, Missouri, is locally significant under Criterion A as the continual seat of county government since 1904. The courthouse is also significant under Criterion C for architecture; the building is an excellent local example of a Romanesque Revival-style courthouse. Situated in the center of a public square in Perryville's historic commercial business district, the Perry County Courthouse is a prominent local landmark. The exterior design of the building has seen minimal alterations. The interior layout has been renovated in the twentieth century to accommodate the expanding county court system, yet still retains many historic architectural features including plaster moldings and wooden stairs. The physical files still retained inside the courthouse give an example of the array of services and operations that have occurred within the walls of the Perry County Courthouse. These include written records of associate and circuit court proceedings, probate records, land records,
