corners of the building are limestone projecting quoins.

The concrete foundation is scored to look like stonework and above it is a wide band of limestone as a water table.

The center bay surround slightly projects from the wall surface and has a gable roof with a gable pediment with cornice returns and a slightly recessed pediment cornice. Beneath the cornice are modillions. Under the cornice frieze is a large limestone surface with "McDaniel School" carved on the face. The corners of the projecting bay are treated as brick pilasters with patterned niches (see photo). In the center of the bay are two free standing round cast concrete columns with tuscan capitals. The entry area itself behind the columns is recessed beyond the central bay and the wall plane of the building itself. There is a double door entry with a carved limestone pedimented surround with heavily moulded ogee surround. Above the entrance is a double window with four over four light sash and a limestone lug sill. There are flanking windows at both stories with four over four light sash.

45) Additional description The cornice is a simple band of terra-cotta with a heavier banding between the fifth and fourth floors. The first through the third storys are sheathed with a limestone veneer with a few stylized geometric details worked into the stonework beneath a simple entablature between the third and fourth storys and in a similar entablature set between the first and second storys. The primary entrance to the building has an arched opening in stonework with a classically derived door hood with a balustrade executed in stone and with stone consoles beneath the hood. The window openings at all storys appears to be original. All windows have one over one light sash and have limestone sills. The first story window openings on the facade have limestone lintels as well. On the side elevations and the rear the first story window openings have brick relieving arch lintels. The facade is three bay with the center bay on both stories as doorways with double multipaned doors giving onto the porch. The porch is two story with a gable roof. The gable pediment has a continuous cornice with a butt shingle face. The porch is supported by square tapering wooden columns. At each story there is an open porch area with a balustrade. The balustrade has a moulded handrail and square balusters. The porch structure at both stories is of wood with a foundation of cast stone. On the north and south roof faces there are attic hip dormers. At the rear there is a gable roof with cornice returns. A shed roofed frame portion with exterior stairs is attached across the rear elevation.		16) number of stories	2
