DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Tower Grove Park encompasses a long, narrow rectangular area of 277 acres located in the south central section of St. Louis, Missouri. It is bounded by Magnolia Avenue on the north, Grand Boulevard on the east, Arsenal Street on the south and Kings-highway Boulevard on the west.

Originally this land was open prairie, and it still retains the flat rolling contour of a plain, but it has now been domesticated. Treeless in the beginning, Tower Grove Park (the second largest park in St. Louis) is of English design with its grand drives and walks interspersed with colossal but graceful statues, miniature lakes, gazebos and other summer houses, and hundreds of trees suited to the soil and climate of Missouri.

The park was designed by James Gurney, Sr. (1831-1920) an Englishman whom Henry Shaw, donor of the land, brought to St. Louis for that purpose. Mr. Gurney, who had been head of the aquatic section of the Royal Gardens at Kew, remained in St. Louis as park superintendent afterwards.

The landscape design follows the so-called "gardenesque" or "cultivated" style of park arrangement, a style popular in the second half of the nineteenth century in this country. The 1883 report of the Commissioners of Tower Grove Park fully explains the nature of this style:

The cultivated style of park ornamentation necessarily implies order, systematic arrangement, but it is not limited to formal or purely artistic conceptions, and the freedom and grace of nature are not sacrificed in the landscape it creates. The artist of the graceful and cultivated style pursues a middle course between the picturesque and the formality of the purely artificial, aiming always to preserve the harmony of natural forms and scenes.

The reflection of this style is still evident. The plan of the park is dominated by a central drive from the east to the west end. Each end of the drive is elevated to provide a view of the park, and the traffic circles interrupt the course of the road to break the formal monotony of a long straight line. Originally on either side of the main drive was a somewhat narrower road by which the park could also be traveled from east to west. Each way had frequent curves and passed through a series of wooded groves. The north road still exists, but the eastern section of the south road between Tower Grove Avenue and Grand Boulevard has been obliterated. Several north-south pedestrian paths which were once prevalent have since disappeared. The roads are now paved for automobile traffic.

TOWER GROVE PARK

Most of the structures and ornamentation places throughout the park date from the second half of the nineteenth century, and most are significant architecturally as surviving examples of pleasure and garden buildings.

Most of the buildings, the main entrance on Grand Boulevard, and the bases of the three 30 foot high bronze statues were designed by George I. Barnett (1815 - 1898). Barnett was an English-born architect who was probably the most distinguished representative of his profession in Missouri in the nineteenth century; he received several other important commissions from Henry Shaw. There are ten picnic pavilions or gazebos in the park (3, 5, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19) which reflect a variety of architectural styles including elements of Greek revival, gothic revival, oriental, and nineteenth century bracket and scroll. As a collection of garden architecture they are perhaps unsurpassed in any public park in this country. In addition there are smaller well houses (no longer functioning as sources of drinking water) of a pleasant nineteenth century rural nature. Three gothic revival stone gatehouses (1, 7, and 20) guard the north, south, and west entrances to the park, and heighten the romantic effect gathered from the other exotic structures on the grounds. The Moorish-domed bandstand (10) is a prominent feature near the center of the park, and it is surrounded by Carrara marble busts of composers which were popular with Mr. Shaw and the public of the 1870's: Mozart, Rossini, Verdi, Gounoud, Wagner, and Beethoven.

Other sculptural decorations include the German wrought zinc figures of griffins and recumbent lions (the latter after Canova's lions) which guard the Grand Boulevard entrance; three over life-sized bronze statues (Columbus, von Humbolt, and Shakespeare) by Baron Ferdinand von Muller of Munich (a favorite Shaw artist), and an ornamental pool backed by "ruins" constructed out of rusticated and classically carved limestone fragments from the Lindell Hotel (St. Louis) which burned in 1867.

Although some buildings have been erected in this century, they are relatively few, and the park retains its essentially nineteenth century character. The gazebos and other shelters are well-maintained, and a few years ago were repainted in Victorian hues which have done much to recapture the original feeling of Tower Grove Park.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SEE INSTRUCTIONS

Tower Grove Park is significant as a well preserved and outstanding example of a public park of the 1870's in particular, and the later nineteenth century in general. The total ensemble--landscape architecture, gaxeboes, and gatehouses, and ornamental sculpture and picturesque conceits---is a rare survivor for its period of unusually fine quality. The park can be compared favorably with any other of its period in the country for the excellence of its over-all plan, and the variety and richness of the ornamentation, both structural and artistic. As a unit--as a collection of picturesque and eclectic styles employed purely for pleasure--it probably has no rival in the United States.

Equally interesting is the background of its creation. Henry Shaw, the wealthy English-born donor and patron; James Gurney, the English-born landscape gardener; and George I. Barnett, the English born architect, present an unusally gifted and enlightened trio of creators. Henry Shaw (whose benefaction include the founding of the Missouri Botanical Garden on his country estate adjacent to the park) was a student of English landscape gardens; and his selection of two fellow-countrymen to assist in developing the park was no accident. The park is, in many ways, an English garden experience transported to the midwest.

Tower Grove Park is a significant recreational, horticultural, and visual experience of a century ago on a major scale which has come through the years, virtually unchanged.

The land for Tower Grove Park was donated to the city in 1867 by Henry Shaw, a hardware merchant, importer, and western outfitter who came to St. Louis in 1819, prospered, and retired at the age of forty to devote full time to travel and his avocation, botany. (D. O. Jensen, "The Enigma of Mr. Shaw", Missouri Historical Society Bulletin, Vol. XV, July 1959, p. 311.) Public funds of $300,000 were then raised to match the land donation and support for its ornamental improvement. Because the territory donated for the park was on the edge of the city and outside its limits, the creation and improvement of the area had to be authorized by the Legislature of the State. On March 9th, 1867 "An act to create, establish and provide the government of Tower Grove Park of the city of St. Louis" was passed and approved. The growth of the city soon encompassed the park and it is now located close to the heart of St. Louis.
